FERNCROFT INN COOK TESTIFIES IN HEART SUIT

Miss Mary Gordon, pastry cook at the Ferncroft Inn, testifying at the trial today of the $50,000 breach of promise suit brought by Miss Elizabeth M. Ryan against Harry E. Mansfield, the inn proprietor, declared Miss Ryan had called him "an old fool."

"She told me in 1913 that a man named Morrill with whom she strolled every day, wanted to marry her and liked her very much; but that he didn't have enough money; and added 'Besides, I'm with Grandpa (Mansfield),'" Miss Gordon said.

(Miss Gordon testified that Miss Ryan told her she met "a nice old gentleman" on a steamer" and that he gave her a bracelet.

FUSS OVER AUTO "BESS."

"There was a fuss over the big letters spelling 'Bess' on the automobile and Mr. Mansfield sent it away" testified the cook. "Miss Ryan called Mr. Mansfield names and swore at him many times. She said she couldn't say anything too mean about him.

"I asked her if she was married to Mr. Mansfield. She said she was not but that in five years he had given her many things. That talk started when she showed me a bar pin.

Attorney Michael M. Sullivan, of counsel for Mansfield had intended to complete his direct examination of Mansfield's chauffeur, Timothy F. Mahoney, but the witness was confined

PUT SMALL LOAF UP TO THE BAKERS

As the result of an investigation now in progress, Thyre E. Hanson, State Commissioner of Weights and Measures, has found that the master bakers have reduced the size of the loaf of bread but have not reduced the price.

Although handicapped by lack of law to regulate the price of bread, Mrs. Hanson called a conference of the master bakers this afternoon to request them to make no reduction in the size of the loaf unless the price is also cut.

The principal provision of the present law is that a loaf of bread shall weigh two pounds, but bread may be sold in three-quarter, half and quarter loaves.

"Under this law the bakers are not required to make full loaves," said Mr. Hudson, "and they are not doing it. They are making a three-quarter loaf that sells for ten cents. Somewhat cleverly they cut down the size of the three-quarter loaf, but they properly advertise it as a half-loaf and sell it for the same price.

"The average purchaser would hardly notice the change of four or five ounces. Yet the change is being made. The result is that the bakers keep within the law and the consumer gets less for his money than he formerly was getting. Under the law I have no power to act, so I have called this conference to put it up to the master bakers as a request to maintain the three-quarter loaf for ten cents."

BABY'S CRIES STIR THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—President Wilson's grandchild has blue eyes, light hair, and its cries can be heard throughout the executive mansion. The son born to Mr. and Mrs. Francis B. Sayre is one of the lustiest babes that has ever occupied the White House. The President frequently takes the infant in his arms, and was with him a short time before entering upon his duties at the executive offices today.

A big store of toys began to arrive today for the new baby. Four nurses are attending Mrs. Sayre and her infant son. All of the White House callers today, including J. P. Morgan and Billy Sunday, the evangelist, prefaced the business on which they came with a personal word of congratulation to the President.

BOSTON SHIPPING TIED UP BY FOG

The fog today played havoc with shipping in Boston Harbor. It was one of the worst Winter fogs in years, and it enveloped the entire Atlantic seaboard.

A big fleet of steamers were stalled in the bay unable to find the narrow approaches to the inner harbor. They send wireless messages to local agents. Other steamers were obliged to cancel sailings, among them the North Star, which was unable to leave for St. John, N. B.

Tugs and ferries were the only craft that dared move about and they were piloted with extreme caution and with whistles shrieking.

VILLA RUSHES HIS MAIN ARMY TO MEXICO CITY

EL PASO, Jan. 18.—General Villa with the main group of his army, is expected to return today to Mexico City in an attempt to adjust the situation of the convention government incident to the flight Saturday from the capital of Eulalio Gutierrez, the provisional president, and the appointment to that place of Roque Gonzales Garza.

Mexico City is reported in a condition of disorder and excitement approaching that which attended the Diaz-Huerta uprising against the Madero government in 1912.

General Angeles, the Villa commander, who yesterday occupied Monterey, has appealed for the immediate sending there of American Red Cross supplies, contracted for some weeks ago by Philip C. Hanna, the American Consul General. He described as desperate the condition of the populace at Monterey.

Angeles probably will proceed at once to Mexico City to assist Villa in his adjustment of conditions there, Villa abandoning temporarily, at least, the campaign against the Carranza forces. Angeles has been mentioned prominently as a possible successor to Gutierrez.

Garza is the fifth president of Mexico within as many months.

Gutierrez, the former President who occupied the palace just one week, disappeared mysteriously between midnight and dawn after the appointment of Garza became known.

Generals Blanco, Robles and Jose Vasconceles have also dropped out of sight. Fear has been expressed that these men have been thrown into prison.

Mounted troops are now patrolling the Mexican capital. The first proclamation issued by President Garza established martial law throughout the Federal District.

The appointment of Garza is interpreted to mean there has been a definite break between Zapata and Villa. Garza is a Villa man.

GERMAN LINER SUNK BY BRITISH LINER OFF CUBA

HAVANA, Jan. 18.—The British cruiser Berwick sank the Hamburg-American liner Praesident off Havana last night, it was announced at the Cuban State Department today.

Earlier in the day villagers along the coast reported that the firing of guns had been heard at sea last evening and last night, indicating that one or more warships had been in action. The firing began shortly after dark and the last guns were heard about 10:30 o'clock. From this fact it is believed that the President tried to escape, but was run down.

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—Word to Hamburg-American line was informed of the announcement of Havana of the sinking of the Praesident, it was stated that nothing had been heard from the President for nearly six months. The last report stated that she was off Mombasa, British East Africa, on July 23.

The President was an old vessel of 1,349 tons. Its marine circles here it is believed that she was probably one of the superb ships used by the German cruiser Karlsruhe in the Atlantic.

The Berwick is a veteran of 9,800 tons and with a speed of 22 knots. She was completed in 1902, was heavily armored and carried fourteen 6-inch guns.

JEROME READY TO GO AFTER THAW

MANCHESTER, N. H., Jan. 18.—William Travers Jerome plans a midnight seizure of Harry Kendall Thaw in carrying out the extradition of the Matteawan fugitive from this city to New York.

Jerome is prepared for a dramatic exit of White's slayer. Thaw is to be whisked out of Manchester and across New Hampshire and Vermont in a powerful automobile and under heavy guard, while the good citizens of New Hampshire are asleep.

Part of the plan is to keep secret just when the auto flight will take place. It is thought that the get away will be Wednesday night. Jerome is due here on Wednesday. He will come as special attorney general of New York to take Thaw back to New York City and there prosecute him on the conspiracy indictment returned as a result of Thaw's escape from Matteawan in August 1913.

ARMED WITH COURT DECREE.

Jerome today is in Washington. He went there to get the certificate of the decree handed down by the United States Supreme Court on December 21. This decree orders the surrender of Thaw by the federal authorities in New Hampshire to the State authorities, and then to Sheriff Harry Bornbeck, who is to figure as Jerome's personal representative in transferring Thaw when the thirty days of grace following the highest court's decree expire.

Sheriff Hornbeck will be accompanied by a retinue of guards and detectives to insure against any attempt on the part of the fugitive to escape. Thaw will be placed in a fleet automobile and there may be enough guards and detectives to fill a second car. The party will head at top speed for the New York line where it merges with Vermont and the balance of the journey will be made by train.

CRIES IN EARTHQUAKE RUINS INDICATE MANY VICTIMS STILL LIVE AFTER LONG SUFFERING

By BRIXTON D'ALLAIRE.
Staff Correspondent Boston American

ROME, Jan. 18.—More than three hundred men and women have been driven insane by the earthquake disaster and their subsequent sufferings. While humanitarian matters have reached here of prisoners dying by mothers and fathers in rescuing their children, some even sacrificing their own lives, more gruesome details are beginning to trickle in.

One of the most tragic stories has to do with a wrecker of San Vincenzo, a little town in the Liri River valley. All his three children were killed in the earthquake and the herself was injured. She brought out the live and her children until six months mad and at night with a knife she killed eleven children. After nearing the children

TEUTON ALLIES TO FIGHT TO THE END

VIENNA, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Jan. 18.—That Germany and Austria are pledged to carry on the war together until the end and that rumors of Austria making peace separately without foundation, is shown by dispatches received in Berlin. Stephan Burian, the Austrian foreign minister, and Imperial Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg of Germany. The messages were made public here today.

These were exchanged when Burian's duties became foreign minister in succession to Count Berchtold. The new cabinet chief sent the message to Von Bethmann-Hollweg declaring that the allied interests (Germany and Austria) have now tested in serious times the value of the alliance, the formation of which, setting upon the tried faithfulness and close interests of interests, must form the foundation of their policy. I beg Your Excellency to accept on the same energetic assistance you gave his predecessor."

THIRD ADVANCE IN COAL PRICES

Several of the local retail coal houses today announced prices for next year of coal 25 cents a ton, making the third advance since last spring and establishing the same level.

The present advance, making a total advance of 75 cents a ton since April 1, is attributed by the dealers to the recent advance in freight rates, increased labor costs equivalent to 15 cents a ton and the 10 cents a ton tax.

Anthracite is now selling at $8.25 a ton; stove $8, egg $7.75, furnace $7.25, pea $6. Shamokin is $8.75. Franklin is $9.25. Egg and pea coal are the only grades remaining unchanged in price.

The increasing advances since last spring in retail coal prices were made by Feb. and September.

QUAKE DEAD 35,000; INJURED 82,000; HOMELESS 125,000

Trainloads of Quicklime Are Rushed to Cremate the Bodies and Prevent Epidemic.

the few buildings left standing in the sixty towns and villages that were turned into tombs by the disaster of last Wednesday. The lime will be used to destroy the bodies that the troops digging frantically in the ruins have no time to inter in separate graves.

It is believed the immediate destruction of the bodies of the dead will remove all danger of an epidemic which would otherwise be a menace, because of a sudden warm wave that has succeeded the intense cold following the disaster.

STORM ADDS TO SUFFERING.

A cold rain is falling, extinguishing the fires that broke out in several towns near Avezzano Friday night. Though the rain has saved from death many who were in danger of being burned to death in the ruins of their homes, it has increased the suffering of the refugees gathered in concentration camps.

The latest official reports to Premier Salandra record 23,764 as dead in twenty-nine towns.

According to the premier, advices from towns and villages that are not heard from are not expected to swell the death list beyond 35,000.

Efforts are being made to straighten out the confusion that has hitherto prevailed as to the number of injured and homeless. The premier told the correspondent today that the reports thus far received from the heads of the relief forces caring for the injured and homeless indicated approximately 82,000 had been injured, but that the great majority were only slightly hurt.

FULLY 125,000 HOMELESS.

The homeless, he said, were at least 125,000. With $1,000,000 just appropriated, the government will be able to care for all of these as soon as conditions permit their being gathered at central points. The premier denied the charges made by some of the Rome papers that the government had failed to act as promptly as it should, asserting that this criticism was instigated by enemies of his cabinet.

Because of great chasms that have opened in the region north of Lake Fucino, it may be impossible to reach some of the little mountain hamlets for weeks.

In the little village of Ortucchio desperate efforts are being made to rescue victims buried in the ruins of the church where they had taken refuge when they felt the first shock. The building was thronged when the hardest shock came. Two of the priests were fatally injured, but they refused to let themselves be carried away while their parishioners were still buried in the ruins. Both died while watching the work of rescue.

SISTERS BURIED ALIVE.

The convent at Ortucchio was also destroyed, burying in the ruins fifteen of the sisters and many others were taken out badly crushed. Their cries can still be heard from the ruins and it is expected that some of the nuns may have been able to find refuge in a corner of the cellar.

At Avezzano and its suburbs, thousands are believed to have died a lingering death owing to delayed aid.

The authorities have noted the large percentage of survivors among the families of returned emigrants who had built their homes after the solid American fashion.

BLACK DESOLATION RULES OVER THE RUINED CITY OF SORA

By CAMILLE CAINFARRO.
Staff Correspondent of American.

SORA, Italy, Jan. 17.—By automobile courier to Rome, Jan. 18.—Soldiers were at work all day today dynamiting tottering walls and the wrecks of what were once fine buildings. At times, as some particularly heavy blast was set off, the ground shook and clouds of dust rose skyward.

This was sure to be followed by shouts of fright from the hundreds of men and women refugees, to whose minds the memory of Wednesday's disaster was still fresh and keen.

The once smiling and prosperous Liri valley, in which Sora is located, is black and desolate as though the devastation of war had swept through it. The slopes of the valley are covered with the temporary homes of refugees who are suffering from the lack of food and clothing, but mainly from hysteria and fright.

As our automobile drew near to the ruined city we passed camps of refugees upon whose faces fright and deep grief were stamped in lines that also moved our own hearts to grief as we beheld them. To the skirts of weeping, dishevelled women clung hungry, half-naked children.

Crowds of men surrounded our motor car, begging news from other districts, for all the telegraph and telephone services had been completely ruined by the earthquake, and the region about Sora was, and is yet, completely isolated so far as wire communication is concerned.

At the entrance of the city we began to see more and more wounded. Some had their heads and limbs bound up; others, too badly hurt to walk, were lying upon the ground or were being carried upon stretchers. Military surgeons were working over them, and numbers were acting as nurses.

Priests moved among the wounded and the refugees, consoling and comforting as the occasion arose or lending a hand to the soldiers where such assistance was needed.

From a row of hospital tents nearby came the groans of the most seriously hurt and the cries of the delirious. On a smaller scale we had seen the same spectacle at other ruined villages through which our automobile had passed, but Sora, being larger and suffering more heavily, naturally presented a scene more harrowing.

BODIES UNDER WRECKAGE.

From a distance the housetops and spires of Sora arise in seemingly regular order and one gets the impression that the city had not seriously suffered, but this impression is dispelled by degrees as one draws nearer and nearer.

Once within the limits of the blasted city one sees that the houses are twisted and torn. Walls are cracked and roofs have fallen in. Church spires sway against the sky and the streets are filled with debris under which still lie many corpses.

Some structures are more shells ready to fall at the slightest shock, and it was not uncommon for buildings to collapse during the day when dynamite charges were fired some distance away. Some of the streets were impassable, the wreckage being piled in them from two to ten feet.

The cracks seemed to move in an easterly and westerly direction, and a curious phenomenon was that the western walls of the houses were the parts to suffer most. Some of the houses of modern construction had stood the shock well, but they did not escape serious damage. However, the fact that they did not collapse utterly gave the inmates time to escape into the street.

HEAVY TOLL AMONG POOR.

That part of the city which suffered most severely was the poor quarter, where the laboring element dwelt. The houses in that district, being cheap and of poor construction, fell at the first earth rumble, burying the inmates beneath them. As a result of this circumstance the heaviest toll of death fell among the city's poor.

The first shock overthrew many of the houses, the second levelled the ruins.

We were told that the military authorities estimated that five hundred victims had been completely buried. Their corpses still lie under the debris. Among the soldiers are many civilians, tearing madly at the wreckage where they imagine their homes once stood.

POPE BEWAILS YEAR OF MISFORTUNE AND MISERY TO MILLIONS

ROME, Jan. 18.—Before mass the Pope was heard to exclaim: "This is indeed a year of untold misfortune. The hand of God rests heavily upon the whole world. Wherever we glance the outlook shows unalleviable misery for millions. We must do bravely the work at hand. Our poor Italians now need both our love and help."

HARVARD DENIES WEINER'S STORY

Francis W. Bonnewell, secretary of the Harvard Corporation, denies that "Captain" Clarence Weiner of London is the Ananias Club.

"Captain" Weiner is the man who wrote to the newspapers that he had notified Harvard he would cut the college out of his will to the tune of $10,000,000 unless Professor Hugo Munsterberg were dismissed from the faculty. Captain Weiner is head of the Weiner News Agency of London, and as a loyal Britisher, you know, couldn't abide by Professor Munsterberg's utterances and articles.

Mr. Bonnewell's statement today was by way of comment on the assertion of "Captain" Weiner that "President Lowell of Harvard had assured him that Dr. Munsterberg would be silenced upon the faculty if he published any more articles on the war and its consequences. This word from "Captain" Weiner came by cable, and when it was brought to Mr. Bonnewell's attention, speaking for the Harvard authorities, he said:

MUNSTERBERG SMILES.

"The Munsterberg-Weiner incident was closed long ago. President Lowell has not written Mr. Weiner, nor has he given any such assurance as Mr. Weiner now claims. Professor Munsterberg has not been asked to discontinue articles on the war."

Professor Munsterberg himself only smiled at word of "Captain" Weiner's utterances, and referred inquirers to the Harvard authorities.

"Captain" Weiner came to Harvard during 1896-7. He is a military expert and generally a hero—he says so himself in a sketch he wrote for an anniversary celebration of the Harvard class with which he would have been graduated had he completed his course.

He is a grandson of J. L. Peiterbinus, head of a Philadelphia lithographing house. Mr. Reitheilgus, at the time of Weiner's announcement of his change in the terms of his will, announced that his nephew might have a million dollars, but no one could prove it by him. He also intimated that Mr. Weiner was counting on his uncle's death to amass the "ten million," both Wiener and Harvard would be disappointed.

CHALLENGED HARVARD.

Wiener left Philadelphia about three years ago. He is said to have received a bequest of $250,000 some time before that.

In October he announced that unless Harvard dropped Professor Munsterberg from the faculty he would leave Harvard out of his will. The professor immediately offered his resignation. President Lowell of Harvard announced soon afterward that no action had been taken in the matter by the university and that no action would be taken.

Bulgaria Gets Ready for War

ROME, Jan. 18.—The following from Sofia, permitted to pass without the least alteration by the censors, created a sensation in diplomatic circles today as foreshadowing immediate development in the Balkan situation:

"Five classes of reservists have been called out. They are ordered to join their colors immediately. No explanation is obtainable from official Bulgarian circles."

Allied Prisoners Fight Among Selves

LONDON, Jan. 18.—A Central News Agency dispatch from Amsterdam says three English prisoners who escaped from a concentration camp there rearrested near Louvain and shot. The Van Dias agency says that serious riots occurred in a prisoners' camp at Neuwmeden. The Turcos quarrelled with the English, but all attacked the German guards when the latter interfered. Six English and eight Turcos were shot.

LONDON, Jan. 18.—The death of Lieutenant-General Anatole Mikhailovitch Stroessel, the defender of Port Arthur, is announced in a Petrograd dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company.

FRENCH REPULSE GERMANS IN NEW BATTLE OF THE AISNE

LONDON, Jan. 18.—The German offensive along the Aisne has been resumed, but without success, says the Paris official statement.

Aside this is the announcement by the British government press bureau that Verdun had been encircled by German troops.

No details were given save that this had been effected by the German advance through the Argonne.

Greater importance is given this feat than to the recent German successes near Soissons, and Berlin military experts are reported as predicting that "a great French army had been bottled up and will be forced to surrender like Marshal Bazaine."

NEW DRIVE ON PARIS.

German reinforcements, according to Amsterdam advices, are being rushed to the Aisne region, from Antwerp, Brussels and Prussia. The Amsterdam correspondent says the Germans are reminded to take full advantage of the recent gains near Soissons and along the Aisne and force a new drive against Paris.

Of importance too, are the reported gains of the Russians in Bukowina, Poland and Turkey. Kirlibaba Pass, commanding the entrance to Transylvania, has been captured by the Czar's troops, an advance down the right bank of the Vistula toward Thorn has been made, while in Turkey, Petrograd reports, unofficially, that 40,000 Turkish soldiers have been wiped out in battle near Kara Urgan and 5,000 prisoners taken.

Bulgaria and Roumania are on the verge of war, according to Rome advices, by the way of Sofia, which says:

"Five classes of reservists have been called out. They are ordered to join their colors immediately. No explanation is obtainable from official Bulgarian circles."

Petrograd also hears that the intervention of Roumania in the war on the side of the allies is near and that Bulgaria will join Germany and Austria in about the same time.

Berlin announces a three-day battle at Tanga, on the Indian Ocean coast of German East Africa, resulting in a notable German victory, 2,000 dead being reported and British with heavy losses inflicted upon the attacking forces, who were supported by two battleships.

DENY PEACE RUMORS.

That Germany and Austria are pledged to carry on the war together until the end and that rumors of Austria seeking peace are wholly without foundation is shown by dispatches received by the Baron Stephen Burien, the Austrian-Hungarian minister, and Imperial Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg of Germany. The messages were made public at Vienna today.

Today's Paris official statement tells of the repulse of two German attacks northeast of Vic-sur-Aisne, which lies on the north bank of the Aisne, about nineteen miles west of Soissons. In the region of Soissons itself and also in that of Rheims there has been no change in the situation says the official communique.

A heavy storm is hampering operations in Belgium, permitting only artillery 'duels. In the Argonne region the French have captured numerous German earthworks. The statement adds:

TAKE GERMAN WORKS.

"In the Argonne, German attacks upon Hill No. 285, which is west of Bourseulles, were without result. We, ourselves, took numerous German earthworks. To the northwest of Pont-a-Mousson in the only portion of the Forest of La Pretre, which still remains to the hands of the enemy. We repulsed counter attacks and maintained all our gains.

"In the Vosges there was a heavy fall of snow. The enemy bombarded Thann without serious result.

German successes in the Arras district and the Argonne forest are announced in an official report from the general staff issued in Berlin today. It states that German troops have captured the graveyard at La Baraille, the town which, it was announced Saturday has been destroyed by the German artillery. The opposing forces are apparently struggling for possession of the ruins.

In the Argonne the Germans claim to have taken several trenches, almost annihilating their occupants.

Today's Paris dispatches report that desperate fighting has been in progress for two days and two nights for the possession of Blangy, five miles east of Arras. According to latest dispatches from the northern front, the French and Germans were engaged in a hand-to-hand struggle in the streets. Neither side could bring its artillery to bear against the village for fear of killing its own men.

The village blacksmith shop, a strong stone building, changed hands several times. Sharpshooters took up their station in the belfry of the village church while soldiers threw grenades from the roofs of other buildings.

Blangy is on the outskirts of St. Laurent, which has been mentioned from time to time in official war office statements. The object of the French and British at Arras is to cut off the German forces holding the Cambrai turnpike and the railway line which is centered from Arras.

SUNDAY BATTLE IN SNOW.

From Rheims to the Swiss frontier snow is falling, but despite the storm there has been desultory fighting. In the Vosges and Upper Alsace artillery was in action all day today, despite the handicap of bad weather, which made large scale fighting difficult.

The Germans are trying with all the energy at their command to consolidate their new positions northeast of Soissons to prevent their recapture by the French. It is reported that more German reserves are being hurried for distribution along the German front from a point north of Tracy-Le-Val to Berry-Au-Bac.

Wounded French officers declare that the battle for Rheims and Craonne-on-the-Aisne was transformed into a veritable inferno by the rain of shells. The fire was relentless, and it was impossible to tell from a distance that a village really existed. The horizon was black with smoke from heavy guns and bursting shrapnel, and the roar of artillery and small arms was such as had not been heard in that section of France since the Battle of the Marne.

Hard fighting occurred around a glass factory on the road to Chalons. The French occupied the building and knocked loopholes in the walls for their sharpshooters. They fought until their last cartridge was gone and were just about to defend the building with the bayonet when a detachment of gallant troops, who braved the fire of hundreds of German rifles, made their way into the factory with a fresh supply.

BIG RUSSIAN VICTORY.

Petrograd announces that the battle of Karaurgan has ended in complete victory for the Russians and remnants of the defeated Turkish army have retreated to Erzerum, it was announced here today.

"The fleeing Ottoman soldiers are being pursued by the Russians. The Turks are abandoning guns, ammunition and food supplies. The official report from the Russian general staff states that "the defeat of the Turks is the greatest victory won in the Caucasus."

Later official announcement was made in Petrograd that all the artillery of the Eleventh Turkish Corps had been captured at Karaurgan by the Russians. The trophies include many German guns.

The Petrograd account of the victory says:

"The battle of Kara Urfan, which was fought for three days in a heavy snowstorm has ended in a complete Russian victory.

"Thanks to the efforts of our valiant regiments of Caucasians, Siberians and the Ussuri Cossack troops the resistance of the enemy has finally shattered. And he was completely routed.

"Remnants of the Turks are fleeing toward Erserum with our troops barring their flanks and inflicting heavy damage upon them. The enemy's rear guard is making ineffectual attempts to cover his retreat.

ENDS INVASION OF RUSSIA.

"Our pursuing troopes are capturing guns, ammunition and food supplies abandoned by the Turks. They have found in ravines, buried in the snow part of the Turkish arms which the enemy was unable to take away. These had been thrown from the heights upon which the Turks were defeated."

The defeat of the Turks at Kara Urgan terminates the attempted Ottoman invasion of Russian territory and relieves Batoum of danger of investment.

Defeated at Sari-Kamysh and Kara Urgan, the Turks will have to withdraw into their own territory to escape annihilation. This will permit an immediate Russian offensive against the Turkish troops that have invaded Persia.

DENY RUSSIAN CLAIMS.

Russian reports of successes in East Prussia and Northern Poland were officially denied at Berlin today. It was stated that the Germans are maintaining their positions in these regions while at the same time making gains west of Warsaw.

"The Russian offensive has been broken," Berlin declares. "The object of the German operations has been reached."

Records Bare Amazing Past of Mrs. Leslie

Show 1st Husband Married Under Duress

Marriage Annulled, Then She Became Bride of Noted Archeologist.

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—Amazing revelations of the early life of Mrs. Frank Leslie, known as the Baroness de Bazus, have been found by James H. Westcott, attorney for the grandchildren of the late Frank Leslie, who are trying to upset the will of Mrs. Leslie and prevent the suffragist cause from inheriting the major part of her $2,000,000 estate.

These documents for nearly sixty years have been concealed from public view in the vaults of the Surrogate's Court. Until the dust was shaken from the papers little was known of the events surrounding her first marriage. And let it be known that it was romantic and that she had obtained a divorce.

The papers show that her maiden name was Miriam Florence Follen; that on March 27, 1854, she was married here to David Charles Peacock, a jeweler's clerk; that the ceremony was performed after Peacock had been arrested on a charge made by her mother; that the bridegroom was taken to the altar by a deputy sheriff; that immediately after the ceremony his wife signed an agreement never to demand support or alimony, and that he left her March 26, 1856, he was granted an annulment on the ground that the ceremony had been performed under duress.

TELL OF SECOND MARRIAGE.

The documents show that in 1857 the former Mrs. Peacock married Ephraim George Squier, an editor of Frank Leslie's Weekly; that in 1867 and in 1870 Mr. and Mrs. Squier, Frank Leslie and Mrs. Mary A. Jubber of London, Leslie's sister, made tours of Europe, with Squier acting as courier; that during the first journey, March 17, 1867, Squier was arrested in Liverpool as an absconding debtor. He accused Leslie of prearranging his arrest.

The papers show that Squier divorced her in 1873; that Mrs. Sarah Ann Leslie, the first wife of the publisher, obtained a divorce and that Mrs. Squier married Leslie. Six weeks after the wedding Squier went mad.

The testimony of Leslie's sister shows that he came to this country under the name of Henry Carter; that he was a wood engraver; that an uncle, an aunt and a great uncle died in a madhouse; that his mother and a sister were considered "odd," and that one of his brothers was known as "Crazy Joe." An unsuccessful effort was made by his sons to break his will on the ground that he was insane.

All through the papers it is evident that unusual measures were taken to avoid publicity, and for this reason they were hidden away and forgotten until the suit of the grandchildren dragged them from the Surrogate's vaults.

Mrs. Frank Leslie, known as the Baroness de Bazus, whose amazing past is revealed in court records sixty years old.

SQUIER AIDED ROMANCE.

The testimony of Mrs. Jubber, who lived at Shaddon Hall, Stony Stratford, Eng., was taken November 2, 1870, under an order of the Surrogate of New York County, before an English commissioner.

Mrs. Jubber was asked about the trips she took with Leslie and Mr. and Mrs. Squier.

"The conduct of my brother and Mrs. Squier was such as one would expect between husband and wife," she testified. "When I first went to see them Mr. Leslie was engaged in fastening on Mrs. Squier's boot. Once, at dinner, Mr. Johnson of the London Journal was present and paid much attention to me. Mrs. Squier went off to bed without saying a word and Frank told me she was jealous and to go and see her. I found her in bed with her hair tied up in ribbons. The following morning I asked Frank what was the matter with her and he said, 'It's her little ways.'"

BOUGHT TO "AMUSE" SQUIER.

"After our arrival in London they went to a pork shop and bought five shillings' worth of sausages and fancy meat, which they sent to Squier, Mr. Leslie saying: 'That will amuse him until we get to Paris.' Three days before they started Frank went to Liverpool and bailed Squier out. It appeared to me to be a strange arrangement. I took it to be prearranged.

"It appeared to me that my brother was living with Mrs. Squier as his wife. She had a complete, controlling influence over him, so much so that he would do whatever she wished. This impression was confirmed by me all through the European tour. When they were out they were always alone as Mr. Squier walked a long way in front.

"Whenever Mr. Leslie's sons were mentioned Mrs. Squier always dampened the conversation, so much so he was cautious not say much before her. At Claridge's Hotel, when I inquired of all at home, to my surprise she said she would be the second Mrs. Leslie when he got a divorce, but nothing could be found against his first wife. To other relatives Mr. Leslie said he was unable to find that his wife had a male friend; but he always added: 'But money should get a divorce.'"

BROTHER'S TESTIMONY.

The papers containing the testimony of Frank Squier, a brother of Ephraim Squier, when taken from the Surrogate's vaults, were practically falling to pieces. He testified when Leslie's sons undertook to break their father's will that before her marriage to Leslie Mrs. Squier asked him to remove certain pistols from the home of Mrs. Follin, with whom Squier was then living, for fear he would "shoot all three of them."

"My brother was declared insane six weeks after his former wife's marriage to Mr. Leslie," Frank Squier testified. "I told Leslie the circumstances that had produced my brother's lunacy had produced the marriage, and he said I was a damned fool. I never spoke to him after that. When the divorce suit was first brought, my brother's wife told me to advise him not to defend it, on account of the exposure which would follow if he did.

"The records of the Peacock marriage were found in the vaults of the old Court of Common Pleas in the Hall of Records. An affidavit by Mrs. Follin, originally appended when the papers were filed, is missing. This should prove exactly why she had caused Peacock's arrest.

PEACOCK'S SUIT.

The complaint submitted by Peacock when he sued for an annulment of his marriage is on file. It shows he was forced into the marriage by arrest on the charge of undue intimacy with Miss Follin. He was taken into custody late in the day, after the Maiden Lane jeweler for whom he worked had gone to his home in Newark. The deputy sheriff told him, according to the complaint, it was marriage or jail, and that he must choose immediately.

Peacock alleged that he was told the ceremony could be performed without publicity and he would never have to support his wife. She would be satisfied with his name.

"The plaintiff, being so in custody of the deputy sheriff," he said, "knew not where to apply for advice and assistance, and when he suggested to the deputy sheriff the name of Augustus E. Brown as the only lawyer with whom he was sufficiently acquainted to apply in such an emergency he was told that Mr. Brown was ill."

Finally the frightened Peacock consented to the marriage, and the deputy sheriff led him to the altar by the sleeve. Immediately after the ceremony he fled from the house. When the annulment action was brought, to insure secrecy the case was placed in the hands of Charles Stuart, as referee, by Judge James Roosevelt. Mrs. Peacock did not defend and the annulment was granted by Judge Roosevelt.

BASIS OF THE WILL.

After the death of Leslie in 1880, Mrs. Leslie managed the publishing business of her late husband most successfully, and the Suffragists will contend that she made most of the fortune which she gave to the cause. The grandchildren allege that at the time she made her will Mr. Leslie was senile and ignored an oral agreement made with the publisher and his sons under which a large sum was to be set aside for the children of the publisher or their heirs.

The grandchildren of Leslie making contest are Mrs. Henrietta Hallanger, Mrs. Florence L. Weisbrod, Alfred Leslie and Frank Leslie 3d.

JANE ADDAMS AIDS JOBLESS RIOTERS

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—Twenty-two persons, among them seven women, who were arrested during a battle between an army of the unemployed and the police reserves at the Hull House, the headquarters of Jane Addams, will be arraigned in court today.

Miss Addams, who aided the prisoners in securing their release, will appear in court to give them all the aid possible.

J. Ogden Hew of St. Louis, the millionaire hobo, engaged the big assembly hall for a jobless meeting.

When the crowd assembled rooms were thronged with the crowd and when the police attempted to march out to the street and assemble for a parade. The mob, despite the fact that the police were in the hall and announced that they could not be a parade because no permit had been issued.

Outside the crowd formed in ranks and raised the banners and started to march. Sergeants Devitt and Rocco ordered the mob to disperse. They had scarcely uttered their protests when both were knocked down and trampled upon. Devitt pulled his revolver and fired five shots into the air. Another volley followed, during the noise, sent in a hurry call to the nearest station.

Mounted and foot patrolmen in scores rushed to the neighborhood of Hull House, and charged the crowd. The patrolmen, annoyed by the sight of the unfortunate, fought back and in a short time none of the policemen were knocked down. They rose, reformed their ranks and began to swing their clubs with telling effect.

The battle raged for more than a long in Halsted street. There was no time to discriminate between men and women, and anybody was clubbed who came within range of the long sticks.

When the melee was over and the ranks of the would-be paraders dispersed it was found that twenty-two prisoners had been taken, seven of them being women. Four of those locked up was the Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker, rector of the Episcopal Church of the Redeemer, and editor of the Christian Socialist.

She carried a cowgirl's outfit and declared she would ride from La Paz seventy miles into the wilderness where the mine is situated.

BABES TO FEATURE THE COUNTRY FAIR

The best little crop in the State is the baby crop, according to the State Board of Agriculture.

So, along with other "crops" the bright-eyed, smiling baby will be placed on exhibition at the country fair. The State Board will soon announce the plan, Mrs. Mother.

When Abijah and Mirandy take in the fair next Fall they will find the booming boy dividing attention with the home-made pie that mother took to fair, the calico rug, Bessie the Wise Man and the Aeronautical Aeroplane of the Air, sometimes known as the woman parachutist.

The proud mother and father will be looking for their "hope" in the "Better Babies" contest.

"These contests are conducted just as stock judging contests are," says the board.

"Points are scored for development and NOT for beauty.

"Such contests have a marked effect upon the development of the child.

"So much attention is given to the care and growing of crops it must be well to consider the larger question of developing strong and healthy children as these should be the best crop of the farm.

Further on, the board says: "It is pleasing to note that in many cases our fairs are abolishing the 'fake' and are striving to get attractions of a higher class, drawing by reason of merit to the fair rather than to the fake."

And with the fakirs looking for new fields now comes the "Better Baby" contest. Abijah and Miranda will not be surprised to hear the announcer's voice of a fakir declaiming:

"Ladies and gentlemen, at the extreme rear of the auditorium you will find displayed in all its pristine brilliancy, the pride and joy of a happy family, the confident hope of a new generation, the biggest show that this mammoth ensemble of natural wonders affords—a boy. He smiles with his eyes and he laughs with his mouth. The champion baby of the Commonwealth. Step lively, please, but don't crowd. Here you, Jake, this ain't no chariot race. Step lively, gents. Step lively."

MRS. MARY WARE DENNETT, Boston suffragist who is prime mover in Twilight Sleep Associa-

TWILIGHT SLEEP CLUB IS FORMED

Mrs. Mary Ware Dennett, a prominent Boston suffrage leader, is chairman of a temporary committee which has organized in New York, a Twilight Sleep Association, the first of its kind in the United States.

In formal gatherings have been held and formal organization is to take place in New York on Wednesday at the Hotel McAlpin.

Mrs. Dennett, the prime mover, caused a sensation in Cambridge in 1909 when she secured a divorce from Harlow Dennett, a well known Harvard graduate and Boston architect, and also got the custody of her two children.

Speaking of the new organization Mrs. Dennett said today:

"The association sprang up naturally and spontaneously. There was a long-felt need for an organization which could answer in an authoritative manner the thousands of questions which American women have asked about this wonderful boon to womankind."

Representative women have been invited to the meeting Wednesday. At least three mothers who have undergone the Freiburg treatment will tell their experiences. Their "twilight sleep" babies also will testify for the method by their healthy cooing. Mrs. Cecil Stewart, Mrs. Mary Boyd and Mrs. Francis Carmody, the mothers, will be supplemented by Miss Marguerite Tracy and Miss Pola LaFolette, who will tell "What Twilight Sleep Means to the Mothers of the Future."

New York Hisses London Editor

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—Cecil Chesterton, editor of the London New Witness and younger brother of G. K. Chesterton, was hissed when he met G. S. Viereck, editor of The Fatherland, in a debate on "Whether the Cause of Germany or That of the Allied Powers Is Just," in the Cort Theatre. It was apparent that the Englishman was facing an audience that must have been 90 per cent. German by the applause with which he was greeted when the crowd hissed him, but Professor William R. Shepherd of Columbia and H. Wetmore Chatman of the meeting, rebuked each hostile demonstration.

'JOSH' EDITION OF THE CRIMSON OUT

Wuxtry!

A "Josh" edition of the Harvard Crimson came out today, and not only did it sell like hot cakes, but it set Harvard on its ears with the stir it caused. And also it started a regular war of words as to "who did it?"

Some of the students put the "phoney" issue up to "Lampy," as they call the hilariously mirthful Lampson.

"Lampy did it; they averred.

Others put it up to the regular Crimson editors.

"It's just a real number by the Crimson staff itself, said this faction.

LIKE THE REAL THING.

In "makeup" and typog it's just like the real thing, but in reading matter and "cute" yes, there are pictures—oh, wow, it's chuck-a-block full of joke stuff.

For instance there's the "lead" story under the heading

LONGED FOR EVENT ARRIVES.

Big annual social function of year arranged for tomorrow.

And here's the story:

"By request of the student council tomorrow will be Straw Hat Day."

And underneath is the picture of a straw hat with the caption:

"Imported Yarmouth Bloater."

And there's another first page story of the Crimson's New Automobiles," telling of the "magnificent new gold coupé Dame Clemens is going to build of white Carrara marble, profusely decorated with the busts of famous editors." In which windows will "appear at intervals."

"It was at first thought to have a pirate room," runs the story, "but the laws of the Commonwealth against gambling are so stringent that the idea had to be abandoned. Just aft the basement is the wine cellar and a hot room, around three sides of which runs an ornate imported brass rail."

PICTURE OF S. Y. HOTEL.

This article is illustrated with a cut of the new building's exterior, which is in reality a fine picture of a New York hotel.

And a lot more like this.

"Dragged down by watch charms is the heading to a story of a "regrettable accident," in which Robert Hush, 15, is drowned in the Charles while watching the Wellesley crew practice. Though a good swimmer, Hush is drawn under by the weight of the watch he carried.

"Weather Expected Tomorrow" is the heading of another. It tells of Professor Hennessy being seen passing in South Duxbury in the direction of Cambridge and due by noon tomorrow.

Much space is given an "Escalator for Harvard" where neither Yale nor Princeton nor DePauw can boast a similar apparati, which is sure to attract many athletic athletes to Cambridge. The contrivance will have an exodus, an egress and three exits.

There are special decorations in honor of "Fanny Ben All Twelvidrake."

Seek Original Crew of 1898 on Oregon

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—When the battleship Oregon goes to Panama to participate in the opening of the canal, she will not only convey Rear Admiral Charles Clark, retired, U. S. N., but members of the original crew who served on the ship during the war with Spain. to him home in Peabody with a severe cold. He is under a physician's care, but is expected to finish his testimony tomorrow.

"Perhaps by Monday the witness' memory may be refreshed."

BIG CROWD IN COURT.

In spite of the inclement weather today a large crowd was on hand when the proceedings were resumed before Judge Fessenden in the Superior Court.

When court convened at 10 o'clock, Attorneys Sullivan and Ronan, counsel for Mansfield and Attorneys Coakley and Mansfield, and Attorneys Coakley conferred with Judge Fessenden at the bench for several minutes. The court stenographer was called to the bench and took notes of what was said.

Attorney Sullivan then addressed the court as follows:

"Your honor, I've been informed by telephone that Mr. Mahoney, a witness who was under examination by me in this trial is confined to his bed at his home in Peabody. He is under treatment by Dr. Tucker of that town. It is possible that he will be able to attend tomorrow. With your honor's permission I ask that I may proceed to call other witnesses and to take up the examination of Mahoney when he comes tomorrow."

Judge Fessenden agreed and counsel again conferred at the bench.

Miss Gordon, employed at the Inn since September 28, 1911, was one of six witnesses called and sworn for the defence.

Miss Gordon told of a conversation she had with Miss Ryan concerning a Mr. Black, whom Miss Ryan referred to as her sweetheart."

Miss Gordon is a witness for the defence. She was examined by Attorney Sullivan. She testified "Miss Ryan told me Mr. Black lived in pretty well and that he had plenty of money." Miss Ryan would often say, 'He's crazy about me' in referring to Mr. Black.

Q.—During 1912 did you hear Miss Ryan call Mr. Mansfield names? A.—Oh, yes, frequently.

Q.—What were the names? A.—Old fool.

Q.—Any more? A.—Oh, yes. She called him something worse than that.

Q.—Do you remember later, in 1912, of Miss Ryan destroying articles?

Attorney Coakley—Just a minute, please.

Counsel conferred with Judge Fessenden, who called stenographer and dictated a statement which was not made public.

GAVE ANSWER IN WHISPER.

Foreman Morse of the jury rose and addressed the court, asking for instructions concerning the testimony objected to by Attorney Coakley and which caused Judge Fessenden to call the stenographer.

The court explained and Attorney Sullivan then framed another question.

Q.—What did Miss Ryan say she had destroyed?

The witness replied too low for the reporters or spectators to hear.

Q.—In 1912 did you hear Miss Ryan swear? A.—I heard her swear.

Q.—Do you remember any other expressions which Miss Ryan used to Mr. Mansfield in 1912?

The witness whispered another answer.

Q.—In 1913 were you acting as maid for Miss Ryan? A.Yes.

Q.—On the day she went away did you have a talk with her? I did.

Q.—What was the nature of the conversation? A.—She said to me, "Mary, I'm going away."

Q.—Anything else? A.—Oh, yes, she said, 'I'm going away for good.'

Q.—Anything else? If so repeat it all. A.—She said she had done anything offensive to the help she was very sorry, but that she couldn't say or do anything bad enough against Mr. Mansfield."

Q.—Did she say anything to you previously? A.—Yes.

Q.—When was that? A.—Two or three weeks previous. She told me she was going away for good because Mr. Mansfield would not give her any money.

Q.—Did you say anything else? A.—She said Mr. Mansfield was "mean."

Q.—Did you help her when she packed her clothes? —A.—Yes.

Q.—What did she take? —Oh, she took all her own clothing. She had a steamer trunk of her own. She put her things in that. She also had a large leather bag which belonged to Mr. Mansfield, and a suit case. Miss Ryan told me she could get all her things in the bag, and for me to pack some of them in another bag. I told her I would not unless she left a note for Mr. Mansfield. She did.

Witness identified a note alleged to have been written by Miss Ryan to witness. Attorney Sullivan read the note which ran: "Grandpa—I simply couldn't get all my things together without your case. I couldn't get all my things and had to use it. I will express it to you."

Q.—Did she talk with you about her marriage? A.—Yes.

Q.—When was it? A.—In the early part of the Summer of 1913.

Q.—What was the conversation about marriage? A.—Miss Ryan showed me a bar pin set with diamonds and emeralds. She said she and Mr. Mansfield were going away to dinner. She said she was with Mr. Mansfield for five years. I asked her if she was married to Mr. Mansfield. She said 'No.' She said Mr. Mansfield would always give her valuable presents.

Q.—What else was said? A.—Miss Ryan told me about an old gentleman who gave her a bracelet.

Q.—When was that? A.—In 1913.

Q.—What was said? A.—She told me she met the old gentleman at the boat and that he gave her a bracelet. Miss Ryan said he was a "very nice old gentleman."

Q.—Do you remember about an automobile which Miss Ryan and Mr. Mansfield quarreled over? A.—Yes.

ASKED ABOUT MORRILL.

Q.—Tell us about it. A.—Well, there was an automobile marked with big letters 'Box.' It came when Miss Ryan was ill. I had a talk with Miss Ryan about it. She said the car arrived and the letters were large and that Mr. Mansfield wanted only a monogram on the car. Mr. Mansfield blamed me for telling Miss Ryan who he sent the car away. Miss Ryan told me she would die before she would tell anybody who told her about the car being sent away.

Q.—Previous to 1913 did you know a man named Morrill? A.—Yes.

Q.—When did you first meet him and Miss Ryan together? A.—In 1912.

Miss Elizabeth M. Ryan.

LATEST PICTURE OF "TOODLES," WHOSE CASE WAS RESUMED TODAY

DOCTOR CHARGES 'MEDICAL RING'

Dr. Ernest Amory Codman, one of the Back Bay's prominent surgeons, a Harvard man, and identified closely with Back Bay society, has been forced out of his position as chairman of the surgical section of the Suffolk District Medical Society because he had the temerity to cartoon the "Harvard Medical Ring."

In the offending cartoon, an ostrich, representing the Back Bay population, was shown feeding on a "Hill of Humbug" and laying "golden eggs" for the "Medical Ring," represented by figures labelled with the names of men prominent in the "Ring."

President Lowell was labelled, as president of Harvard University; the Harvard Medical school, the Massachusetts General Hospital and the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital were also represented.

The cartoon was accompanied with remarks which came even closer than the drawing to touching prominent Harvard men. President Horace H. Arnold, of the society, after Dr. Codman's talk, spoke briefly, objecting to the introduction of personalities in the discussion of medical science. Several members, who felt that they perhaps were referred to, and who resented the remarks of Dr. Codman also replied. The meeting, it is said had run for a discussion of the question. "Had it occurred to you that an operation or department in a charitable hospital is responsible for the medical and surgical efficiency," became more stormy than a scientific meeting is generally supposed to become.

Dr. Codman had answered the question by suggesting a "scoring of results," to tabulate the efficiency of treatment, and to keep returns of treatment for a year after the discharge of the patient.

The present way of things Dr. Codman explained in remarks applicable to his cartoon, which represented the Back Bay people feeding off the land laying golden eggs for the "ring."

In explanation Dr. Codman termed the Medical Ring of operating at times prices for appendicitis, for instance, on the slightest excuse. He announced that it was easier to remove the appendix than to determine before the operation if there was really anything the matter with the organ.

Dr. Codman to prevent misunderstanding explained the whole affair thus:

"By the 'ring,' I referred to the best elements interested in medical matters in this community—the men and institutions to whom the majority of practitioners in this community are indebted for their scientific and practical training for their profession; to the very men who for many years past have given the best that was in them for the cause of medical education and the advancement of scientific medicine. It was to add one more burden to the many they have already borne which induced me to attract their interest to what I believe to be the most important question which has come before the profession for many years.

Bertholf of the revenue cutter service stated in his annual report.

Captain Bertholf recommended that the number of cadets admitted to the service annually be increased from four to ten or twelve. He urged the construction of a new cutter for the California coast at a cost of $250,000, and another, heavy enough to clear the harbor of ice, for New York, at a cost of $710,000. He adds that a $200,000 cutter is essential at the Panama Canal.

THE MORNING HOME NEWSPAPER

WELLESLEY GIRL FOILS BURGLAR

A masked, armed burglar broke into the home of Mrs. Philip E. Morey, at No. 6 Kingsbury street, Wellesley, during the night, and was only frightened away by the screams of Lavina Williams, the maid, who confronted him in the dining room. The Wellesley police worked from midnight till dawn without finding trace of the man, and continued their search today.

Mr. Morey is a traveling man. Mrs. Morey was alone in the house with her daughter and the maid. They had retired for the night.

Just before midnight Mrs. Morey and Mrs. Williams were awakened by a sound in the cellar. The maid went to Mrs. Morey's room, and they consulted in whispers. The noise continued, and finally the girl plucked up courage to go downstairs. Mrs. Morey went into the room where her daughter was asleep.

FACE TO FACE WITH GUN.

The maid lit a lamp and, carrying it in her hands, started down the stairs. The sounds had ceased. She went through the hall into the living room and then into the dining room. As she entered the dining room she saw a man. He was standing just to the left of the door beside a small cabinet on which was set the telephone. His face was shrouded with a cloth mask and he held a revolver levelled at the girl.

He said no word, and she for a moment was frozen into silence. After an instant she recovered, screamed, turned and scurried up the stairs to where Mrs. Morey was waiting.

The two women, clutched in each other's arms, hear the man go calmly through the house to the front door, and out, and away. After a time they dared to go down to the telephone.

CUT TELEPHONE WIRES.

They tried frantically to get "central" only to discover that the wires had been cut near the instrument.

The maid, Mrs. Williams, then ran across to the home of a neighbor, J. L. Rochford. She told her story and Mr. Rochford telephoned the police. The officers arrived in quick time, but could get no trace of the burglar.

Mr. Rochford stayed in the Morey home for the remainder of the night, as company for the frightened women.

The burglar had made his entrance through the cellar window. It was the noise of the opening of this window that awoke Mrs. Morey and Mrs. Williams. He had come up the stairs, evidently heard the girl descending, and had half-hidden behind portieres which cover a door just beside the telephone cabinet.

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—Within the next few days the only private bathroom in a department head's office in the Municipal Building will be officially dedicated. The entrance is through a door of Circassian walnut. It was also learned today that the Comptroller contemplates installing a barber chair in the bathroom.

Fleischer Asks for Value in Trade Mark

"The label 'made in America' and all the fact of America-made goods should become increasingly familiar all over the world," declared Charles Fleischer, leader of the Today Commons, at the meeting in Huntington Chambers Hall, adding: "But 'made in America,' thus familiarized, should represent not merely American hustle and the capturing of foreign markets, but it should be a trade mark of worth of the whole character and calibre of self-respecting and significant people."

SUNDAY 'CLEANS UP' WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—The national capital today for the first time was able to judge for itself the power of "Billy" Sunday, the baseball evangelist, who came to Washington "to clean up" the city in a street meeting at Convention Hall.

Sunday was greeted by a committee of prominent citizens when he stepped off the train from Philadelphia with "Mr. Sunday, members of his family and Homer H. Rodeheaver, his choir leader. From the station Sunday and his party were escorted to the Willard Hotel, where he held a reception and met a number of Washington clergymen.

Following luncheon tendered him by the committee in arrangements, Sunday rested at the hotel until time to go to the White House to meet the President and to Convention Hall to take up his vigorous work of the afternoon. He was introduced to the executive by Secretary of State Bryan and Representative Nelson of Wisconsin.

Sunday was due to start his description of what would happen "If Jesus came to the capital" at 4:15 o'clock and to talk on the same subject Bryan following the meeting. He planned to return to Philadelphia on an early evening train.

Five thousand ticket holders, all that could be admitted to the hall, were on hand to hear Sunday.

'LITTLE HOPE THAT THE LORD WILL SAVE BOSTON,' SAYS SUNDAY

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 18.—A scathing arraignment of Boston formed the feature of Billy Sunday's sermon in the Tabernacle, which was crowded to the doors again.

"There is little hope that the Lord will ever be able to save such a hell hole as Boston," the evangelist shouted. "I plead for the generations yet unborn. What kind of generations do you men expect to breed?

"O Lord, will sinful, devil-beridden Boston wake to its manhood? Will it ever wake to its regeneration? It will shake, but the Lord will have to go some. Make bare Thy mighty arm, Lord, and bring it to its senses."

GIFT IN BAGGAGE BREAKS THE LAW

If any of you went home for the holidays and carried Christmas presents in your trunk, you're apt to come afoul of the federal government. For you broke the law.

This is the effect of recent tariff rulings by the Interstate Commerce Commission as pointed out in the current number of the Chamber of Commerce periodical, Current Affairs.

The law is that it is illegal for any purchaser who checks his baggage to sell or give away any article included or carried in that baggage. If you sold to the old clothes man the duds you wore out at camp last summer and brought home in your trunk, you broke the law. If you give them to the Belgians you break the law. Both if you send the article by mail or express after carrying it around for a while in your trunk, you're within your rights.

The ruling is aimed at the commercial travelers who carry large sample cases and give away or sell samples when on the road. If they wish to make presents or sales they must mail the article from some town adjacent to the favored party.

BOSTON, NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN AMATEURS IN BOXING TOURNEY HERE

AMATEURS IN BIG INTERCITY BOUTS

By JACK CONWAY.

THIS is going to be a big week in the boxing world. The noble ring men who have been sleeping at the post will get on the job again and give the dear old "fans" something to talk about.

The first shot will be fired in Bridgeport, Ct., where Gilbert Gallant of Chelsea and Sam Robideau, the Philadelphia lightweight, are scheduled to exchange blows in a fifteen round, no-decision bustle fest. Gallant would prefer to fight for a decision but he asserts that he will have such a big margin in his favor when all is said and done that Sam Robideau will be forced to admit that Chelsea boasts of no class fighter.

Running a close second to the Gallant-Robideau quarrel in the big series of inter-city bouts which will be held under the auspices of the B. A. A. in Mechanics' Building tomorrow night. Some of the leading amateur glove men in Boston, New York and Brooklyn will be seen in action and some sweet sport is expected.

THE special bouts will be fought at 115, 125 and 135 pounds, while there will be a couple of battles in the heavyweight division. The local boxers are all in fine condition and they feel confident that they will be able to give a good account of themselves against the invaders.

The following inter-city boxers are as follows.

115 pounds—Harry McLatchey and G. P. Fried, Boston, vs J. Hogan, New York, and A. Martin, Brooklyn.

125 pounds—Harry Carlson and John J. Sullivan, Boston, vs M. McLean, Brooklyn and A. Macks, New York.

135 pounds—M. Crowley and Billy Cole, Boston, vs John Jarecki, New York, and S. Dolnfro, Brooklyn.

145 pounds—Pat. McMurtry and James Gorman, Boston, vs J. Rosenberg, Brooklyn, and W. McDonnell, New York.

Heavyweight—James McDonald and P. L. Kelly, Boston, vs Arthur Sheridan, Brooklyn, and H. Guild, New York.

Besides the special bouts, there will be contests in open classes. This assures the fans of a banner evening of entertainment. The boys should come up to the high standard which has been set by the A. A. U. and national championships, which are conducted by the B. A. A. in this city each year.

THERE is another important bout scheduled for this week. It will be between Ollie Gibbons and Jimmy Clabby and will be staged in Milwaukee, Thursday evening. The contest has been advertised as the big world's middleweight championship and a record-breaking crowd is expected to turn out to witness the festivities.

Clabby and Gibbons are classed among the world's best fighters. Both men have made remarkable records in the ring, but in a quick decision whether they bout Thursday will prove a thrilling affair. The rival boys met and mixed with each other's style and this is liable to cause much slow work.

GIBBONS, however, is confident that he will win from Clabby. Here is what he tells his friends concerning the coming encounter:

"I've boxed Clabby three times. The first time we met at my home town in St. Paul. I was a green kid at the boxing game, and hadn't been in my way around a boxing club, not to speak of boxing a man like Clabby. Still, I give me a licking that time! Well, I should say he did. He nearly murdered me. Infighting, I didn't use or have much of Clabby for about a year. Ed chased all around the country to see scraps and study the different boxers and their styles. Then all of a sudden, I got a wire from Milwaukee to box Clabby. At first I was inclined to refuse, but I didn't.

"WELL, that Milwaukee match was a corker. It was a rough one throughout and the other scared to death. At the end of the first round Clabby gave me a queer look and said, 'Say, soon, are you the same kid I boxed in St. Paul.' If you get the idea, Clabby let better, but I'm going to say that on the coco before the evening is over. I know that I certainly stopped at top speed after that. He tried as hard as he ever tried in his life to beat me, but he couldn't do it. In the tenth round I cut loose, and I guess I made Clabby sit up and take notice.

"I was the happiest person in Milwaukee after the match, because I knew that I had only been shaded by a slight margin.

"I bet met Clabby in a fifteen-round bout in Winnipeg and won."

Leach Cross in Bout Tomorrow

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—Leach Cross, who recently gave Young Shugrue the hardest task he ever experienced in the ring, will appear at the Broadway Sporting Club tomorrow night against Harry Pierce.

Bowling Scores Keep Coming in Fast

Many Enter Big American Tourney

FIRST ROLL-OFF NEXT SATURDAY

There is every reason to believe that the second week of the Boston AMERICAN bowling tournament will outclass the first in the number of entries.

Though the second week began only last Thursday midnight already a surprisingly large number of scores have been received. Many of these came from women, who are making great efforts to capture the special prize offered the lady bowling the highest three consecutive strings. The second week will end Thursday midnight.

The ten men who qualified for the first week's scrapping roll-off will be held at Littlefield's alleys on Franklin street Saturday night have started preparations for the event. Prizes will be awarded to the four high men in the roll-off.

Here are the men who will meet in the roll-off and the scores they made last week:

238—OXFORD ALLEYS — William Wood, 5 Bench street, Boston; Witness: Thomas McCabe, 15 Beach street, Boston.

382—TRINITY COURT ALLEYS— L. A. Christopher, 50 Sea View ave., West Winthrop. Witness: L. Vose, 55 Gennpton Way, Dorchester.

373—ARCH STREET ALLEYS — Harry Swales, 358 Tremont street, Boston. Witness: He couldn't do it in the tenth round I cut loose, and I guess I made Clabby sit up and take notice.

"I was the happiest person in Milwaukee after the match, because I knew that I had only been shaded by a slight margin.

"I bet met Clabby in a fifteen-round bout in Winnipeg and won."

382—BOWES WHARF ALLEYS—J. W. Hanedur, Lynn, Mass. Witness: F. A. Hardy, 128 Commercial street, West Roxbury.

373—TERMINAL ALLEYS—Thomas J. Dudley, 575 Rutherford avenue, Charlestown. Witness: William J. Curran, 470 Medford street, Charlestown.

The women's prize for the first week went to Mrs. Jessie L. Young, No. 163 Atlantic avenue, Boston. She rolled 315.

Only one enrollment in the contest is necessary. This will be put on file, and the bowlers can send in their scores every week without sending an enrollment coupon along.

The following prizes will be awarded each week.

| First Prize | $20.00 |
| Second Prize | 10.00 |

BASEBALL NOTES

CHARLEY HERZOG ASSERTS THAT JACK Murray will not be a member of the Reds. The objection to taking Murray, the Giant outfielder, at a trade is that his contract calls for too much salary.

* * *

IT IS INTIMATED IN THE WEST THAT Mathewson is eager to get rid of Murray because he realizes that the player is being paid more money than he is worth.

* * *

THE REDS WILL TRY OUT A COLlegian next Spring who looks like a future star. He is Maggie Lennon, a pitcher of the Yale University, from which he graduated last June.

* * *

BARNEY DREYFUSS HAS ADDED TO the Cincinnati baseball staff. It is the statement that his new pitcher, Rube Waddell for a single game, is worth $10,000. Waddell stepped a three cornered salary contest with Manager Hitchcock of the Yankees for a mere request.

* * *

THE PIRATES AND RED SOX WILL meet in a spring series to be played at Hot Springs during the latter part of March.

* * *

BILL PHILLIPS, MANAGER OF THE Medwin, will bring to Lynn Shelly Mcdonald away from the Athletics.

* * *

PHILLIES HAS JUST SIGNED JOHN Strands, who played with the Worcester club last season.

* * *

LENA BLACKBURN, THE WHITE SOX shortstopper, and Ping Bodie may be released to the Milwaukee club as part of the deal whereby the Sox get Outfielder Felch.

* * *

THE PIRATES HAVE SIGNED DAVE Hendy, a former college football star, for a trial. He is a pitcher with a fine record in the

CHAUNCY TO ROLL SOMERVILLE TEAM

JIMMY CLANCY completed arrangements for two matches between the Chauncy team, leader of the City League, and an all-star aggregation, composed of the pick of the Somerville City League.

The first meeting of the pair will take place on January 28 at Hobbs' Alleys, Davis square, Somerville, of which Clancy is manager. The date of the second contest has not been decided upon as yet, but it probably will be rolled February 4 at the Chauncy Alleys.

* * *

THE Arlington Boat Club bowlers, who now loom up as one of the strongest combinations in the Amateur Boston Pin League, will be put to a supreme test tonight, when they meet the Colonials of Dorchester.

These two teams enjoy the distinction of having the best pinfalls in the Boston pin circuit and are numbered among the first four in the league.

* * *

THE Arlington rollers have come with a rush of late, mainly through the great work of Baker, who leads the individuals with an average of 315, and are now treading on the heels of Colonial, the leader, being but three points behind the Lynn team.

Colonial, though two points further down the line, has not been doing well of late, and an immediate brace is necessary to keep it among the leaders.

* * *

COTTAGE PARK, the new member of the Amateur League, which is making them all hustle, will have its work cut out for it this evening in its match against Dudley.

Dudley put a crimp in Colonial's aspirations last week and expects to make an equally good showing against Cottage Park. The yachtsmen are tied with Arlington for second place.

HOCKEY NOTES AND GOSSIP

The Arena team got the jump on Queen's by going after them from the start. The fact that the Canadian collegians were the opponents made the Arenas look so good. The rink is a Canadian hockey, and with Queen's showing the same style, it gave the locals a chance to shine.

* * *

Conditions will be decidedly different against the B. A. A. The Boston boys play straight up and down hockey. They play four forwards abreast down the ice, and they hold what in track circles is called lanes. If they lose the puck they stop short and start directly back.

* * *

The idea the Arena players show in recovering a puck is to circle around when they lose the puck and try to meet the opponent again before he reaches the defence. This style requires extra energy and unusual staying power, and the Arena players are all good skaters and love fast play.

* * *

The matter of substitution gives the B. A. A. the edge right at the start. Substitution will be permitted in the first half, but not in the second half. No substitution will be permitted in the game. The B. A. A. has a big squad to draw from, while the Arena has but three spare men.

* * *

With a team that has a fairly good chance to stand off the B. A. A. in this city, the game tomorrow will attract a big crowd.

* * *

There is every indication that the Pacific Coast Hockey Association will ask the National Hockey Association for a showdown in regard to the dispute over Smith.

Lester Patrick of the Coast League states that it is too late to do anything with Smith this season, but he added that if the N. A. A. is going to trample over "a bit of paper," the coast league would either break up the N. H. A. or insist that the organization recompense the coast body for the loss of Smith during the present season.

* * *

George Kennedy, on behalf of the Canadian Athletic Club, has protested the match with Quebec. He sent a telegram to President T. Emmett Quinn of the National Hockey Association from Quebec, making the bare protest.

SHORTSTOP OF THE BRAVES

They are trying to find a new name for the New York Americans, the club recently purchased by Messrs. Ruppert and Rusten.

The best way is to sit on the bleachers and listen.

* * *

That story about a manager swapping a ball player for a dog makes funny reading and has caused a laugh all over the country, to judge by the newspapers that come to the AMERICAN office.

One of the Pittsburgh papers prints an interview with President Dreyfuss of the Pirates, in which he tells of a funny experience he once had with the late Rube Waddell. I think it beats the dog story.

"If I'm too bad Waddell is dead," said the Pittsburgh magnate. If he were living he could go on the stand and swear that he was once traded for a stogie. Yes, it's true.

* * *

"Rube was with the Pirates at the time, and we were tired of him. Clarke gave him to Chicago, and he came to the office to see me about it. He said he was perfectly willing to go to Chicago, but wanted half the purchase money.

"'Here, Rube, take it all,' I said, and I pushed toward him a stogie. Pittsburgh stogies, in those days, sold four for a nickel. On his way out of the office he was served with an attachment for a bill of $10 he owed a tailor for a pair of trousers. Yes, Rube would make a good witness for the Feds."

* * *

Mr. Dreyfuss told a number of stories about the great but eccentric pitcher. Rube was getting $1,500 from Pittsburgh, and the Pirates had a chance to sell him to the Boston Nationals for $2,500, but he refused to make the transfer. "I don't want to go to Boston," he said, and that's all there was to it.

* * *

One night the Pirates were traveling in charge of the late Harry Pulliam, then secretary of the Pittsburgh club and later president of the National League. At 2:30 in the morning the train stopped at some way station. Rube left his berth and scrambled until he found Pulliam calmly wooing Morpheus. He shook the genial Harry, and when he wakened, told him he wanted to borrow a dollar.

"What for?" queried Pulliam.

"The train's stopped, and I want to get some sandwiches," was Rube's reply.

* * *

Here's a funny story that is going the rounds. It is supposed to be a conversation between Stallings and one of his scouts.

Boston Scout—George, I have just the pitcher you need to cinch the pennant.

Stallings—Who is he?

Scout—Jack Curved of the A. A.

Stallings — What did he ever do?

Scout—He pitched four years of college baseball without losing a game, lost only two out of sixteen games his first year in Class C, won eighteen out of twenty-four with a second division team in Class B, has won twenty-two out of twenty-seven games this year, and the five he lost were 1 to 0 games. He has as much speed as Johnson, a curve like Chief Bender's, can watch the bases like Ed Walsh, has Matty's control and head work and—

Stallings (interrupting) — Has he ever been canned by a big league club?

Scout—Not that I know of. Of course not.

Stallings—I don't want him.

* * *

Would you kindly settle an argument in a poker game. A has three tens and a pair of jacks and B has three tens and a pair of kings. Who wins?

ROXBURY READER.

Poker is a little out of my line, but is our league the three tens and a pair of jacks win.

* * *

If a runner is on first and the batter hits an infield fly to short, is the batter or runner out?

City Hall, Boston. J. LAWRENCE.

In the American League the batter is declared out by the umpire, providing there are not two out at the time. In the National League the batter is out if the fly ball is caught and the base runner has to take his chances.

* * *

Some one asked about George Brickley the other day. A reader, Eric H. Hanks, of Balloon Falls, Vt., sends me the following information regarding him.

"George played with the Newport, N. H., team in the Twin State League, which also was the championship team."

Thanks, Roy.

PENN MEN RALLY TO AID MEREDITH

The question as to whether or not Ted Meredith will be allowed to compete on the University of Pennsylvania relay team at the B. A. A. games, which will be held in Mechanics' Building on February 6, is being discussed by Frederick W. Rubien, chairman of the national registration committee, and Justice Bartow S. Weeks, chairman of the legislation committee of the A. A. U.

Philadelphia in general, and the Penn students in particular, have been wrought up over this matter ever since Alfred J. Lill, president of the A. A. U., ruled that Meredith could not represent Penn in the relay races against Cornell and Dartmouth, because the meeting is to be held under A. A. U. rules and Meredith is registered.

KEEP LOOKING YOUNG

It's Easy—If You Know Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets

The secret of keeping young is to feel young—and do this you must watch your liver and bowels. If there's no need of having a sallow complexion—black rings under your eyes—pimples—a bilious look in your face—dark eyes with no sparkle.

Your doctor will tell you 90 per cent. of all sickness comes from inactive liver and bowels.

Dr. Edwards, a well-known physician in Ohio, selected a vegetable compound mixed with olive oil to act on the liver and bowels, which he gave to his patients for years. Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets, the substitute for calomel, are gentle in their action, yet always effective.

They bring about that exuberance of spirit, that natural buoyancy which should be enjoyed by everyone, by toning up the liver and clearing the system of impurities.

You will know Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets by their olive color. 10c and 25c per box. All druggists.

RUSH MAGEE DEAL TO BLOCK 'FEDS'

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—President Gaffney of the Braves, just back from a visit to George Stallings' farm at Haddock, Ga., will take immediate steps to rush through the Sherwood Magee deal.

The Magee deal, the Lobert deal and several other trades which will be made before the season starts have been made possible, a baseball official explained today, through an arrangement between all the major league clubs to work in harmony in the efforts to block the Federal League from getting any disgruntled players.

Both Magee and Lobert flirted with the Federal League and they used this as a means to be placed with two of the best clubs in the National League, Boston and New York, at advanced salaries. From the same source it was learned, in order to carry out this scheme to thwart the Federal League, the magnates will confine their deals simply to players, and that no money will be involved in any of the transactions.

Seven Cities Make Bid for Amateur Regatta

Application for the privilege of holding the amateur rowing championships for 1915 have been received from seven cities, although the question will not be officially decided until the meeting of the executive committee of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen, in New York on the third Saturday in March.

Representatives of the following cities will be present at this meeting to advocate the claims of their sections: Saratoga, Washington, D. C.; Peoria, Ill.; Detroit, San Diego, San Francisco and Duluth, Minn. There is a feeling that the regatta should be held in the East this year, because most of the active rowing clubs that can be depended upon for entries are here and they can ill afford to send men on long journeys.

'Wild Bill' Donovan After Dave Shean

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—Manager Donovan of the Yankees will likely put through a deal in a few days whereby Dave Shean, the former Boston National League player, will become a member of the New York team. No negotiations are under way for the second baseman yet, but Donovan is almost certain he can obtain him from Providence, of which President Lannin of the Red Sox is owner.

Lannin will be in this city in a few days and Donovan will make him an offer for Shean.

Wrestling Winner to Meet Aberg Here

The winner of the match between Isando Bey and Waldek Zbyszko, which will be decided at the next international wrestling tourney on Monday, January 25, in Mechanics Building, will be matched with Alex Aberg, according to an announcement made by Promoter George Tuohey.

Lemle, who is to meet Lurich in one of the events, also is anxious to meet either Aberg or the younger Zbyszko in the event of his getting a win over Lurich.

The "left-handed" request, "Do you keep ALLEY'S ALE?" doesn't always get ALLEY'S ALE for you. Say "Give me ALLEY'S ALE"—and you'll get it. The reason is apparent when you taste the real ale—ALLEY'S.

B. A. A. FAVORITE OVER ARENA TEAM

The Arena Hockey Club faces the hardest test of the season tomorrow night when it plays the first game with the B. A. A. at the Arena. While many "fans" were pleased with the work of the A's against Queen's University, they also detected considerable bad hockey in the work of the rink players.

The B. A. A. rules a favorite because of its great work against St. Nicholas.

While the Arena game tomorrow night is the big club match of the week, the college championship probably will be settled in the Arena this week.

The Dartmouth team, with the clever Bags Wanamaker and Captain Leon Tuck, will meet the Harvard team Wednesday night. On form this should be one of the best college games of the year. Yale had a hard time beating M. I. T. in an overtime game. Princeton succumbed to Dartmouth, and the men from Old Nassau were turned back by Harvard Saturday night.

Princeton and Harvard will have their second meeting at the Arena next Saturday night. From all indications the Crimson should win and no play-off of a third game will be necessary. The school games in the Interscholastic league are: Arlington vs. Medford, today; Newton vs. Medford, Wednesday; Melrose vs. Cambridge Latin, Friday.

Changes Made in Army Schedule

Hogan heard of this and as soon as White got in town last night Hogan presented himself at the Astor and offered to fill the bill. And they then and there very pleasantly agreed to try to knock each other's heads into the middle of next Spring.

White is confident that he will dispose of Freddy Welsh in their big tussle on January 26.

The Fortunes of Fanny

She Asks for a Day Out and Learns a Lesson

"Fanny," Mrs. Abbott expostulated, "I am surprised at your impertinence to Miss Emily."

By Virginia Terhune Van de Water

CHAPTER XLIV.

Copyright, 1914, Star Company.

THE position which Fanny Holden secured as general housework maid was with a Mrs. Abbott. She was a widow with three children—two boys, aged respectively fourteen and sixteen, and one daughter, twenty years old. All the washing was "put out," and Fanny was sure that she would have no difficulty in performing the work of the eight-room-and-bath apartment. As there were no stairs, up and down, which one must so many times a day, the place should not be a hard one.

Her room was small and insufficiently lighted—yet she had it all to herself. It opened directly off the kitchen—a fact which had its disadvantages, as well as its conveniences. The odors from the cooking had a way of lingering in the small chamber and among the maid's clothes. But Fanny tried not to notice these trifling drawbacks to her general comfort.

She had not been long with Mrs. Abbott before she learned that in many ways the position of general housekeeper was not a simple one. Her new mistress was fastidious about her maid's appearance and insisted that she look neat and dainty when she opened the front door or waited on the table. It was not easy to remove a large gingham apron and slip on a white one and go down the long hall to the front door before the person who rang the door bell once rang it a second time. Nor was it easy to have one's black dress, white apron, collar and cuffs immaculate when one must cook the dinner, serve it and wait on table.

Fanny did her best. Mrs. Abbott was not strong and did no housework herself. Her daughter—whom Fanny was told to address as "Miss Emily"—went into society a great deal and did not even make her own bed. The two boys had never been trained to be careful about the condition of their rooms, and, as they were untidy and careless, they increased the maid's work.

But Fanny had determined not to be discouraged. As she had no friends whom she could visit at present, she went out seldom. She had a morbid fear that Nellie and her companions would wish to avoid her now that she was in service, so she did not make her whereabouts know to them nor go to see them. Mrs. Abbott noticed her disinclination toward sociability, but did not suggest that her maid rest in her room on her Thursday afternoons and evenings and her Sunday afternoons and evenings off.

NO CONSIDERATION AT ALL FOR HER

"If you want to go out," the mistress would say, "of course you can go. But if you are going to remain at home, you might as well get dinner and wait on the table as usual." Her new mistress was fastidious about her maid's appearance and insisted that she look neat and dainty when she opened the front door or waited on the table. It was not easy to remove a large gingham apron and slip on a white one and go down the long hall to the front door before the person who rang the door bell once rang it a second time.

Nor was it easy to have one's black dress, white apron, collar and cuffs immaculate when one must cook the dinner, serve it and wait on table.

Fanny did her best. Mrs. Abbott was not strong and did no housework herself. Her daughter—whom Fanny was told to address as "Miss Emily"—went into society a great deal and did not even make her own bed. The two boys had never been trained to be careful about the condition of their rooms, and, as they were untidy and careless, they increased the maid's work.

But Fanny had determined not to be discouraged. As she had no friends whom she could visit at present, she went out seldom. She had a morbid fear that Nellie and her companions would wish to avoid her now that she was in service, so she did not make her whereabouts know to them nor go to see them. Mrs. Abbott noticed her disinclination toward sociability, but did not suggest that her maid rest in her room on her Thursday afternoons and evenings and her Sunday afternoons and evenings off.

NO CONSIDERATION AT ALL FOR HER

"If you want to go out," the mistress would say, "of course you can go. But if you are going to remain at home, you might as well get dinner and wait on the table as usual."

At first Fanny was not wise enough to resent this suggestion, but after a while she discovered that she was growing pale and losing energy. She decided that it was her duty to go out, even if she must walk the streets or go to a moving picture show to while away her hours of freedom. She reached this decision at the end of several months in Mrs. Abbott's employ. It was one Thursday morning, and her employer informed her that Miss Emily was expecting two guests to dine that evening.

"I know," the lady said, "that you will give us a good dinner."

"But," Fanny ventured mildly, "this is my day out, you know."

Mrs. Abbott looked surprised. "You haven't been in the habit of taking your day off since you came here. I did not suppose you wanted to do so."

"Surely," the daughter of the house interposed, appearing in the doorway at this junction, "you're not going out tonight, Fanny—just when I was going to have especial company."

Fanny looked at the graceful figure of the speaker, and a sense of resentment vanished her. Why should this girl have pretty clothes, a happy home and a servant to wait on her while she, Fanny Holden, must work and toil? Yet she replied politely:

"I know I haven't been taking any time off lately," she acknowledged, "but I really think I ought to, for I need it. But since you are having company tonight, I can go out tomorrow afternoon and evening instead."

"Good!" exclaimed Emily, smiling with relief. But her mother objected.

"That won't be convenient," she said, "for the young gentlemen are expecting friends to dinner tomorrow night. You see, it will be Friday, and they will have no studying to do—so they like to have company then."

Fanny remained silent. In her breast revolt was surging. Why, just because she was in service, should she have no consideration? Were she in a store, factory or office she would have her evenings to herself.

"Well?" asked Mrs. Abbott, looking at her. "Are you going to insist on taking an afternoon and evening off this week?"

FANNY DECIDES SHE MUST STAND UP FOR HERSELF.

Fanny spoke with enforced calmness. "No, she said, "at least not today or tomorrow—since the young gentlemen have invited friends here. But I must go out either Saturday or Sunday night—whichever time suits you."

Emily Abbott flushed with annoyance. "Really, Fanny," she said, "you have chosen a very unfortunate time to make this stand for your rights. You know perfectly well that I expect an old school friend from Boston to spend Saturday and Sunday with me, and that if you are away on either of those evenings it will upset my plans to have some people in to meet her, and will spoil all my pleasure."

Fanny spoke impulsively, her resentment getting for the moment the better of her discretion. "But, Miss Emily, you forget that I, too, have a right to my pleasure."

"Fanny," Mrs. Abbott expostulated, "I am surprised at your impertinence to Miss Emily."

"I beg your pardon," Fanny said, controlling herself with an effort. "I did not mean to be impertinent. But a working girl has to look out for herself. If she doesn't nobody will look out for her. I will stay in for the rest of the week. But after this I must have my days off regularly, please."

Emily started to reply, but her mother checked her by a warning glance.

"Very well," Mrs. Abbott said to Fanny. "I will arrange it hereafter."

"What a fool I've been," Fanny muttered later to herself when alone in her room. "That's the way with employers. If you give them an inch they will infer in short order that you don't give them an ell. I've learned my lesson all right."

Quite Easily Done

"Marin" said Mr. Jollyboy, very solemnly, thinking to take a rise out of the wife of his bosom. "I heard of a dreadful operation which was performed on a girl. She seemed in danger of losing her sight, and the clever ophthalmic surgeon who operated on her found——"

"Yes?" breathlessly interposed Mrs. Jollyboy, "found what?"

"That the poor girl had a young man in her eye!" rejoined Mr. Jollyboy, with a chuckle.

Silence reigned supreme for the space of five minutes at the end of which time Mrs. Jollyboy said, quietly:

"Well, of course, it would all depend on what kind of young man it was, as there are many men she would have been able to see through!" And, with a scornful sniff, Mrs. J. resumed her knitting, leaving the enemy completely routed.

A Rapacious Tree

A singular tree in Cuba is called the parasyry tree. It begins to grow at the top of another tree. The seed is carried by a bird, or wafted by the wind, and, falling into some moist, branching fork, takes root and speedily begins to grow. It sends a kind of thin, stringlike root down the body of the tree, which is soon followed by others. In the course of time these strings strike the ground, and growth immediately commences upward. New rooting continue to be formed and get strength until the one tree grows as a net around the other. The outside one surrounds and presses the inner, strangling its life and augmenting its own power. At length the tree within is killed, and the parasite that has taken possession becomes itself the tree.

The Husband Hunters

The Two Mortimer Sisters Spend Their Savings in Furnishing an Apartment

By ANN LISLE

SUNDAY morning occupies a definite niche in the working girl's scheme of things. It is the one time she has for shampooing, glove-cleansing, fastening stray hooks, darning stockings and, above all, for rest and beauty sleep.

On Sundays Judy Mortimer often stole into one of the great churches on the avenue and fairly bathed her soul in the beautiful service and glorious music. But Bonnie never rose from her "beauty sleep" before 11, and always devoted the two hours before Mrs. Spencer's midday dinner to even more active beautifying processes.

But on the Sunday, after the Mortimer girls had signed the lease for the Studio Apartment, Bonnie flirted off the covers at 8 o'clock and roused a sleepy Judy to action.

"Come on, poke, we'll finish packing our elaborate goods and chattels and get ready to spin over in Reggie Burke's car! It's coming at 10, and if the elegant Reginald condescends to act as moving man and moving van, little Bonnibelle doesn't want to rile him by keeping him waiting."

"You look pretty active for a little lady who strolled in at 2 a. m., Bonnie," said Judy, and gave a little gasp as she threw off the covers and poked her toes into a cold little bedroom slipper, which borrowed its temperature from the chill floor on which it rested.

"But how dare you risk the hours you keep if you want to be a successful business woman?"

"My dear child," said Bonnie, pulling her shoe laces a bit tighter, "a successful tango teacher has to study the latest steps or she wouldn't know a Warfield walk from a canter waltz. Wait till you've had your first dancing lesson, Miss Hoyt-Mortimer, and you'll see just how neatly business and pleasure combine in the life of a dancing demoiselle."

MR. BURKE ARRIVES AT TEN IN HIS CAR

Promptly at 10 Reginald Burke arrived and whisked the Mortimer girls away from the boarding house, which Bonnie was quite willing for him to see now that she was leaving it. He showed a cheerfully demonstrative spirit about helping his chauffeur carry up their shabby old trunks and declared that he was going to stay right in the apartment with them until they got things shipshape.

Judy had not been particularly attracted by Reginald Burke. There was something too sleek and smiling about a face that seemed to slide up into hiding under his smoothly-brushed brown hair. To her he looked like a fox, and the poorer cousin, Tommy Burke, suggested a friendly watchdog with a family resemblance to a slyer relative.

But when a young gentleman who owns an automobile and has a chauffeur at his command sends his servant off to have a Sunday holiday and rolls up his own shirtsleeves preparatory to hanging pictures and moving furniture about for a pair of insignificant girls of the working class, it would be unkind and ungracious for one of those girls to retain a suspicious attitude in regard to his helpers.

There was a certain irrepressible good humor about Reginald Burke, as he went whistling up and down the way he managed a fox-trot step on the way up the rounds of the ladder he made pretty certain that Judy capitulate to him. She felt completely friendly when he appeared in her room with a great print of Sir Galahad in one hand and a china candlestick in the other and begged her to help a black smudge off his forehead.

By noon the wicker settees which the girls had purchased with part of the apportioned $200 from their little nest-egg were set in just the respective places in their big dance studio. A place had been found for the phonograph and Bonnie's couch and bureau were arranged behind the big screen in the alcove den of the studio. When the victrola and records were purchased the girls had found there was but $50 left to furnish their living-room, kitchenette, bath and Judy's wee bedroom. And those rooms looked horribly bleak and empty when they were arranged, and a few poor possessions set in place.

"It's 2 o'clock, little ladies, and I know three people who are going right out for a good, hearty table d'hote," said Reginald Burke with kindly tact. He knew that in their present tired state Bonnie and Judy might feel unhappy and self-conscious over the poverty of their makeshift furnishings, and he felt sure that a hearty meal would soothe them into the state of mind where their natural optimism would make them quite cheerful and merry over the things that must "do" until the earnings of the Hoyt-Mortimer Studio justified its owners in having a home as well as a place of business.

He longed to offer to lend them a rug or two and a few good pieces of furniture from his own overstocked bachelor "diggings," but there was something in Judy's manner that told him a very good policy with her would be to make haste slowly.

As Judy enjoyed the full flavor of the hearts of lettuce with Roquefort cheese dressing, Reginald decided that there was a whole-souled enthusiasm and simplicity about the older Mortimer girl that made her seem even prettier than little Bonnie, and he found himself wondering if Clyde Marston would take the kid off his hands and leave him free to "shine up to Judy a bit." He leaned across the table ingratiatingly.

REGGIE DECIDES THAT JUDY IS ALL RIGHT.

"I hear you're going to be Miss Bonnie's side partner, Miss Mortimer. If you aren't too bored with me will you let me come back with you after dinner and give me your first dancing lesson? It's so much better for a man to teach a girl, and if you'll let me I'll phone Clyde Marston to come and help Miss Bonnie superintend our gyrations."

"Not on Sunday," said Judy gently. "You've been awfully good to us today, Mr. Burke, and if you like to come back with us and let us get our first kitchenette meal in your honor that'll be nice. But I don't want to begin dancing today. Do I seem preachy and queer?"

"You seem all right," murmured Reginald, and Bonnie's blue eyes popped wide open in amazement. Dear old Judy was really quite attractive, but it didn't occur to Bonnie to be jealous.

As they came out on the street Reginald suggested that he telephone to Clyde Marston.

"I may have to chase him all over town, and it will be more interesting for you girls to sit in this hotel foyer and watch folks drifting! Much nicer than to hang around a restaurant or a drug store while I scrape a bowl of soft hash in here now, Judy," said Bonnie ten minutes later, "but the stunning-looking man is starting at me. He's at the corner table. I wonder if we look like people he might know."

"That's an editorial 'we,' Bonnie; he's staring straight at you. Folks always do," added Judy in a tone that had no trace of bitterness. "My, but he is staring."

Reginald Burke's voice broke in on the discussion of the attractive unknown. "It's all right; Clyde Marston's tickled to pieces to join us. He's at the Hyperion and he'll meet us here in an hour. You girls can manage all right for a while, and I'll have Scotch and soda. We'll have our party right here in the foyer—the seal of fashion is set on doing that, for there's Jimmie Compton-Blake over at the corner table. Good looking chap, isn't he?"

"Is he?" asked Bonnie, indifferently. Judy's eyes twinkled. It occurred to her that "little sister" was a diplomat.

"Want to meet him? I know him well," remarked Reginald, with elaborate unconcern.

"I think we're very cozy as we are," said Bonnie; "don't you, Judikins? And Mr. Marston will be here soon. Some other time, perhaps, Reggie——"

"All right," boasted Reggie, "I'll bring him to call."

And Judy felt that the remaining $250 of their "nest-egg" was doomed to be spent on furnishing their living room.

STRAIGHT from the court of Napoleon has come the inspiration for this costume in white broadcloth outlined in grosgrain ribbon. The jacket flares over a veston of buff colored brocade embroidered in tarnished gold with threads of black to bring out the design and fastened with an antique gold buckle. A bit of brocade peeps from beneath the tunic.

EVEN the material of this costume—a deep buff colored taffeta—is old-timey in weave and in color, and as it ripples its way from the pointed basque to the black faille underskirt, it recalls many a "best dress" of the long ago. There is an attempt to define a waistline, for the material is gathered in the back toward a jet medallion. A black band calls attention to the high collar.

'MORE CARS,' CRY OF SOUTH BOSTON

South Boston citizens have begun a protest against the car service given the peninsular district by the Elevated, and a committee is to petition Mayor Curley to help them secure better conditions, it was announced today.

The citizens charge that the cars are unsanitary, are run on a "go-as-you-please" schedule, are the "worst cars" the Elevated owns, and are often overloaded.

Here are statements by protesting citizens:

MENACE TO HEALTH.

James E. Coveney, real estate dealer, No. 497 East Broadway—The car service in South Boston is nearly beyond human endurance, and it is up to the people to take measures to secure better conditions. A well known physician told me a few days ago that the South Boston cars are a menace to the health of persons who ride in them. Old cushions, he said, are used and seldom cleaned. They are germ breeders of the worst kind. In addition the Boston Elevated railroad has provided no places of shelter for passengers who are obliged to use their cars, which are run on a go-as-you-please schedule.

J. J. McNamara, No. 393 West Broadway—I am always in favor of any plan that will improve conditions in South Boston. As regards the car service, you can say for me that in this district it is the worst of any place of equal population in the United States. Residents of Hingham and South Framingham are given better service, as their cars are run on schedule, but here in South Boston, we walk to a stopping post and trust to Providence in getting a car going to our destination and not to the Boston Elevated railroad.

LIVES IN DANGER.

Dr. Harold S. Stone, West Broadway—Every evening, between 4:30 and 7, at the Broadway and Dorchester avenue transfer station, cars may be seen coming into South Boston loaded with human freight to the danger point and under conditions that would bring swift penalty from the government if the same conditions existed in the shipment of animals. Only a few days ago I saw men on the steps of the cars holding onto the handlebars with their bodies swaying out and in danger of being seriously injured by passing automobiles and teams. Every old car the company has is sent to South Boston, with their old infected old cushions that apparently are never cleaned. To cap the climax, they give us twenty-minute time on most of the lines and no protection, for women and children from the weather.

J. E. Connell, No. 479 West Broadway—I am pleased to express my views in regard to the poor services we get here in South Boston, from the Boston Elevated railroad. As I am in business near the Broadway transfer station, the miserable service has been under my observation for many years and you can say for me that it is the most unsatisfactory of any part of Boston. In addition to the public who suffer because of the irregular trips, the disgusting service has been a big handicap to the business interests of the district.

And hundreds more.

TINKHAM PLANS BANQUET DEBUT

Congressman-elect George Holden Tinkham will appear as an after-dinner speaker tomorrow night, for the first time in many months, at the banquet of the St. Alphonsus Association in Roxbury. Other speakers on the list of the expected are Governor Walsh, Mayor Curley, Collector Fitzsimmons of Providence, Congressman Gallivan and Hon. M. J. Dwyer.

At the clubrooms in Smith street Sunday was "baseball afternoon." Among those present was Walter J. Maranville, who, because of the great popularity of his "Rabbit's" column in the AMERICAN, was introduced as a "rising young newspaperman."

"Hughey" Jennings came out from town with Ben Smith, his theatrical partner. Mr. Jennings discussed "Clean Athletics." Another speaker was Secretary Arthur D. Cooper of the New England League.

There were songs by Larry McCabe, Master Charles Riley, Master Edward Gorman, Edward Manning, the St. Alphonsus Trio, Charles Nuthall, the Snyder Serenaders and Ambrose Woods. Joseph Conway presided at the piano, and Joseph V. Comerford was master of ceremonies.

Heiress, Gagged and with Her Limbs Bound by Rope, Was Thrust Into an Open Boiler.

THE present exploit of Elaine came perilously near to being her last.

The beautiful young heiress was within a minute and a chin depth of drowning. Gagged, and with arms and limbs bound by ropes, she was thrust into an old boiler.

A hose nearly cuffs the plotters against her liberty and life intended it should be, but even the big boiler, of the kind used for stationary engines, is a sufficient torture and a sure enough means of death to satisfy the friends who plotted her destruction. The boiler lay on the beach, close to the lapping waves, for a few hours the tide would rise. The water would rush in through the attached, open pipe, and drown the girl as certainly as trapped rats will drown when they are caught in a pail of water.

It was a hideous plight. No wonder that the girl's face is blanched with terror and that her eyes is the awful fear of those who look upon the features of death. The tragic predicament is nearly like that described by Victor Hugo, in his pen literature, the man who was sinking in the quicksand. "The sand reached his mouth. Silence. The sand reached his eyes. Night." The water of the rising tide reached Elaine's neck. It rose to her chin. It was her the strength and cunning of the villains.

Elaine had received news that the Chickering Hand was about to be turned loose.

"At 12 o'clock your store will be robbed," was the warning signed by the hideous emblem of the closing hand.

Elaine telephoned at once to Craig Kennedy, the young scientific detective, in whom her confidence was daily growing. He promised to meet her and her attorney at the jeweler's shop. Speedily they were reinforced by a squad of policemen. Customers came and went. The watchers looked at the clock. The proprietor looked at it. One pointed to a minute past when there was a trembling of the floor and in an instant the part of the floor on which a showcase of splendid diamonds had rested, fell crashing into the basement.

The men fired through the aperture. When the suffocating fumes had cleared the party made a rapid descent to the basement, but too late. The human fingers of the Clutching Hand had vanished. But the fingers had loosened their grasp upon the burlap bag in which they had carried her to escape with the jewels. The precious hoard was safe.

Dashing from the basement, Kennedy signalled a taxicab, seized Elaine Smith M. and pursued the criminals.

How the girl was carried away and thrust into the boiler, as the Clutching Hand thought, to her death, and how the detective, discovering, heard her last faint cry for help, and by means of a blowpipe cut an opening to her prison and drew her forth to safety, is a moving climax to the rushing episode of "The Exploits of Elaine."

CHAMBER URGES NEW SHIP PLAN

A program for the upbuilding of a strong and enduring merchant marine, without resort to government ownership, is suggested by the Committee on Merchant Marine of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, in a report just made.

The Chamber proposes a privately owned and operated merchant marine under the general supervision of a government shipping board and with the financial encouragement of the federal government.

Six suggestions outline the feature of the proposed policy:

First—The establishment in the Department of Commerce of a shipping board of five members, after the example of the British Board of Trade and similar organizations of other maritime governments; such shipping board to be composed of the Commissioner of Navigation and one representative each of the ship-owning interests, the shipbuilding interests, the shipping in waterborne trade and an expert in marine insurance—this board to have general supervision of the American merchant marine.

Second—A prompt revision and modernizing of our navigation laws and regulations so far as they unnecessarily increase the cost of operating American ships as against foreign vessels.

ASK MALL LAW CHANGE.

Third—An amendment to the Ocean Mail Law of 1891, so that the compensation now paid to twenty-knot ships to Europe can be paid to ships of less speed, of the second class, suitable to establish regular mail, passenger and fast freight services in naval reserve ships on the longer routes to South America Australasia and the Orient.

Fourth—In place of an investment of $40,000,000 in government ownership and operation, as proposed by the pending message, a Federal fund of the same amount, to be administered by the shipping board for the purpose of guaranteeing mortgages examined and approved by the board, or for careful loans upon shipping built or purchased for overseas trade and for other auxiliary naval service.

The $40,000,000 devoted to ownership and operation of a government owned fleet would produce only a relatively small fleet; but a proper use of a government fund in the manner indicated would provide a large one, of far greater value to the commerce and the nation.

FOR NAVAL RESERVE.

Fifth—Annual retainers of a proper amount to citizen officers and men of the merchant marine of the United States, after the practice that has proved so successful, particularly in the British mercantile marine, and special compensation to steamships not under contract for carrying mails, but built on designs approved by the Navy Department and pledged to the service of the government as fuel ships, supply ships or transports—so that the government may be able to control an adequate American auxiliary fleet and a naval reserve of officers and men in time of need.

Sixth—To meet a present condition, an extension of the powers of the existing Bureau of War Risk Insurance to cover marine insurance on hulls and cargoes—with the understanding that this bureau shall be discontinued when the war has ended.

Rockefeller Fund for Education Aid Now $117,362,710

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—Through funds given by John D. Rockefeller and through the general Education Board's efforts in inducing others to give, a total of $117,362,710 has been dedicated in the United States since the organization of the board twelve years ago, it became known today. This sum, included from the gifts by Mr. Rockefeller, funds still in the hands of the board and funds contributed by others to supplement the appropriations made by the board.

Using the general education board as a medium, the subsidiary bodies, Mr. Rockefeller has provided more than $73,000,000 for educational purposes. Of this sum, the board has made direct appropriations of $15,589,549; has paid to Chicago University at the specific request of Mr. Rockefeller $13,554,843; has appropriated for the Rockefeller Institute for medical research $10,267,022, and still has available for its purposes, $32,939,156. Supplemental funds, contributed by others aggregated more than $44,000,000.

Tells Geographic Influence on War

Yale Prize Won by Braintree Boy

Frederick J. Manning of Braintree, a junior at Yale, has been awarded the class of 1883 prize of $50 for writing the best prose description on the subject, "New Haven and Its Environs." The judges were professors of the Yale faculty.

BIDDLE TELLS HOW TO THRASH DEVIL

"In my own Bible class of Philadelphia I have sixteen prize fighters. They are among my most intelligent friends and seem to grasp the meaning of the Bible with greater ease than many people who are in what are considered the more respectable walks of life," declared Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, addressing a Bible class from the pulpit of the Ascension Memorial Church at Ipswich.

Calling his movement "Athletic Christianity," he said that the Drexel Biddle Bible classes had increased from the three original members to over 20,000 and now encircle the globe.

He urged his congregation to fight the devil, bidding them, with appropriate gestures:

"Wait him on the nose. Put up your dukes and keep at him and, after you have been in the ring a while, you will find him on the run."

After the Episcopal ceremonial had been read and the choir had marched into the vestry, Biddle began shaking hands in the auditorium. He embraced old and young men in the class. "Whoop her up for the Lord," he shouted. The class cheered him with a long "Tiger."

Biddle told of boxing Philadelphia Jack O'Brien, Al Kaufman, Jim Jeffries and Jack Johnson. He said boxers "are asked at times to lead the class. Once Williams, the heavyweight, is a devout Christian. The other day he sent me $2 he had won in a fight in New Orleans and asked me to put it in the plate for him.

"We often give boxing exhibitions for the members of the church. I still box, but I have not been able to go into the ring for some time because of a bad eye. The doctor has cautioned me to get it poked again, because I may lose it. All of my boys kneel in the ring and pray before they begin to fight with their adversaries."

Though I was only twelve years old, my parents sent me away to die of consumption, and I became bitter against God. I cursed and swore against him until I was finally cured and sent back to Philadelphia. I was then sent to boarding school, and there I found myself disliked because I would not accept Christ. I always wanted to fight. Three times I had my nose broken, and once I had my cheek carved up, and the boys used to say: "Look at that measley fellow—look at that rotten Biddle." And then I ran away from home and became a prize-fighter and haunted the race tracks.

"Afterwards I started in business with the money I had inherited and gained by the investment of others. I got many contracts through having a bar in my office, and getting men drunk and then bullying them into signing contracts when they did not know what they were doing. My wife and family would shun me until I grew afraid of myself.

"And then, when I finally saw the light, I took my wife and my children abroad and lived in a little cottage, making my wife do her own work, and saved all my money. When I returned to America, I paid every man I had swindled. I paid them all back 200 per cent. on the dollar."

Dedicate Custom House on Friday

Next Friday the new Custom House, whose tower of gigantic height has become the most prominent landmark of the port, is to be dedicated. The exercises and arrangements are under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce.

At 11 a. m. formal dedicatory exercises will be held, at which will be present a limited number of invited guests. At 12:30 p. m. the speakers of the exercises and several other officials will be the guests of the Chamber of Commerce at the Exchange Club. From 1:30 to 2:30 p. m. members of the Chamber will be conducted on [illegible] inspection through the lofty structure. Admission to the morning exercises will be by card, which has already been sent to invited guests. Admission to the building for the inspection trip in the afternoon will be by ticket.

Have You Heard of the "Order of the Bee Hive?"—It Plans to Wake Things Up

They have formed what they call the "Order of the Bee Hive." Its constitution declares that it is for the purpose of maintaining "a propaganda of progressive principles, especially those set forth in the Chicago Progressive Platform of 1912 and the Massachusetts Progressive Platform of 1914, and the cultivating fraternal and social relations between believers in those principles."

The symbol of the order is certainly suggestive. The bee hive is the one natural community in which the energies of every member are devoted solely to the common good, and in which also the benefits resulting from united action are not confined to the community itself, but are impartially at the disposal of all outside. What the bees do by instinct, this human hive plans to do from principle.

The officers of the central organization are citizens well known to be devoted to the principles of the two Progressive platforms—principles which the AMERICAN advocated and defended long before the term "Progressive" became a political rallying cry.

The ritual is dignified and impressive, and, while deeply religious, is humanitarian in tone; is yet so broad and unsectarian that it appeals without distinction to all denominations of "believers in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of all sorts and conditions of men." Even from a political viewpoint there seems to be nothing in the constitution or by-laws to bar from membership adherents of any party who are converts, as most Democrats and some Republicans are, to the principles which the order has been formed to disseminate. In fact, the AMERICAN observes that the list of charter members includes a few Democrats and Republicans and men of all denominations and sects.

Massachusetts badly needs an organization which is not strictly partisan and which will not be encumbered with the duty of electing its members to office, but will be content with the greater power which an organization enjoys that devotes itself to the discussion of principles and the enforcement of loyalty to those principles by the elected candidates of ALL the parties.

In our American politics, criticism of party candidates or party representatives by members of another party always loses much of its force, because the citizens make large deductions for the influence of partisanship in the criticism. If this new organization will watch affairs at the State House, will devote itself to the advancement of good legislation and the defeat of all bad measures, will help those whose batting average is good and will help to defeat and retire from public life those whose batting average is bad, in the Legislature, and will help to propagate the truth concerning the great reforms which are today under lively discussion, then such an organization will meet the needs of the hour and ought to thrive. It certainly, whether long lived or short lived, will do some good.

The AMERICAN wishes it every success and believes that it will be successful.

Give the Country a Merchant Marine Immediately

The Bill Now in Congress Needs Improving, but That Can Be Done Later On. What Commerce Must Have at Once Is Ships Flying the American Flag and Carrying American Products

Copyright, 1915, by the Star Company.

The bill now in Congress providing for an American merchant marine is, as this newspaper has repeatedly pointed out, far from perfect.

But it is at least a beginning.

By passing it Congress can lay a foundation for an American fleet that will restore the American flag to the seas, and restore American trade to American seaports.

By defeating it Congress will put an end to the hope that at last this country is to resume its former high place as a maritime nation.

The amendments which will be required to make the bill what it ought to be can be added later. They will be added later if the bill is passed, for their necessity will become immediately apparent.

The important thing is to set aside all arguments and pass the bill. American products must reach the foreign markets that are now wide open to them. American farmers, manufacturers, producers of all kinds must be enabled to seize the opportunity for trade that will be within their reach as soon as the bill is passed.

The attacks made on the bill on the ground that it opens the way for Government ownership are not worthy of consideration. The Government ownership feature is the strongest argument for the bill.

There can be no question that the Government can engage in the carrying trade at a profit. And the AMERICAN believes that having once embarked in the carrying business it should continue in it.

It cannot agree with Mr. Wilson's plan to keep the ships while they are run at a loss and abandon them when they begin to make a profit.

It does not concede that when the Government proves that it

More Truth Than Poetry

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE

We Never Shall Look Upon His Like Again!

WHEN old Bill Taft found out he'd talked not wisely but too much,
And, as the hapless consequence, had got himself in Dutch,
He spent another year or two attempting to explain,
To find, alas, the more he talked the more he talked in vain.
But Teddy in the self same hole would say right off the bat:
"Don't charge that statement up to me. I'm sure that Loeb said that."
And everyone would pity him and say, "How very sad
That Loeb should be so indiscreet and get T. R. in bad"!

WHEN Woodrow found that he had led the proletariat
To think that he was asking for another time at bat,
He grew exceedingly distressed; for those who know his mind
Are sure (they say) that he would wish for nothing of the kind.
But though he keeps explaining what he meant us all to think,
The more that he explains the more the people smile and wink.
But Teddy would have said: "You see, Loeb said that, gentlemen."
And everybody would exclaim: "We know! That foolish Loeb again."

WE have not looked on William Loeb for lo! these many years.
No more in all the public prints his name and face appears.
We do not know what job he's got, or how he's occupied,
But he has left a long-felt want that cannot be supplied.
For Presidents may come and go their solemn four-year round,
And when one finishes his term another can be found.
But not while Presidents shall boss this quarter of the globe
Shall there exist an alibi like Secretary Loeb.

If He Didn't Say This, Why Didn't He?

Mr. Roosevelt strenuously denies that he said, "I can say anything I like on any subject in the world." And yet he does, doesn't he?

Where the Need Is Greater

Some men who are talking of willing their brains to science would find a better demand in the war zone, where they need solid foundations for the big guns.

Reckless Daring

"Czar Again At Front."—Headline. Which means that he is almost within hearing distance of the firing line.

Navi Can Cross the Ocean

Now we in the story of Japan using to extend its military strength do we read that she economized on her navy.

History as It Is Learned

"The first two political parties in the United States," wrote a little girl on an examination paper, were the Constitution and the Guerriere. They fought for independence."

What Was the Rate of Interest?

"Aurora doctor watches his appendix taken out with interest."—Chicago Herald. Financial operation, so to speak.

The March of Progress

The moderns learned the art of hiding in trenches from the cave men, and that is not the only cave man method employed in the war, either.

Not His Gait

Colonel Roosevelt may spend all his spare time with the army of the unemployed, but there is not the slightest likelihood that he will ever enlist in it.

Science for Workers

By EDGAR LUCIEN LARKIN

Q.—"Will you kindly inform me as to the distance of the star Alcyone from the sun, and its size?"—E. Numan, Los Molinos, Cal.

A.—Both are unknown, and so far as can now be seen, must remain unknown. It has no parallax large enough to be measured by the most accurate modern micrometrical methods.

That is: take a large telescope with you, go to Alcyone, turn, look back this way, then the entire diameter of the orbit of the earth around the sun, a huge ellipse, 185,764,000 miles in diameter, if a bright line in space so that it could be seen, would appear to be so small that the telemicrometer could not measure it. Not knowing the distance, the size cannot be known.

But, judging from its light when compared with that of other suns whose distances are fairly well known, it must be colossal—many times larger than our medium-sized star—the sun.

Q.—"A certain astronomer or professor some time ago published an article in a Washington paper claiming that all suns, our own included, are absolutely cold. If he is right, will you kindly explain why we on a hot Summer day feel an intense heat descending upon this earth? Where does this heat come from?"—Florence H. Plath, Oakland, Cal.

A.—Energy comes from all sources, but what it is is entirely unknown. It traverses trillions of miles of space at absolute zero of temperature without any effect until it hits matter. It travels in free space with set specific speed of 186,330 miles per second. It is this energy strikes the retina of the eye we say that the effect is light. If it strikes various kinds of matter, we say the effects are various rates of heat.

In the spectroscope up here I have seen gaseous metals glowing with intense brilliancy in the gases surrounding the sun, and also far less intensity in the distant suns Sirius, Regel, Vegg, etc. One asked what caused the iron in the sun to turn so gas would answer, heat. But how does heat come hither through 92,885,000 miles of absolutely frigid space and not vanish as heat?

How does the energy of the sun pass through a globe of frigid liquid air at focus and set paper and shavings on fire? I do not know. I do not know what heat, light, energy, matter nor anything nor any entity is.

All I can say is that energy reaches the earth from the sun in 499 seconds of time, and when it arrives and strikes the molecules of matter we change the name from energy to heat and light. And also chemism. All of which are at present beyond the understanding of man.

In-Shoots

A bore can speak grammatically and still be a bore.

It is as easy to lick badness into a small boy as goodness.

The boy and the boy's mother seldom agree as to the virtues and attractions of the boy's best girl.

It depends entirely upon the temperament of the subject whether a vivid imagination produces rosy day dreams or hideous nightmares.

The talk about triumph in defeat is never appreciated by the fellow who has got it in the neck.

If burglars who stole a boarding house Sunday dinner ate it we are opposed to further punishment.

South African women are buying glass diamonds. Must be rarer and cost more than the genuine.

The law plays no favorites. But that cannot always be said of those who administer the law.

Fitting Yourself to Succeed

"Only by Doing Each Task with All Your Might Can You Hope to Be Worth While," Says Ella Wheeler Wilcox

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1915, by the Star Company.

"THE head of a big millinery establisment begs you to urge girls to take some interest in their work and their employer's success. This will be the best possible kindness which could be shown them to awaken their sense of personal responsibility in the work given them to do."

Not long since a brilliant woman arose at a club meeting and addressed an audience of more than eight hundred women. The address was eulogistic of women generally, and contained a particular plea for all women to express their "own individuality."

"This has been my effort for many years," said the speaker, "and it did not matter to me whether I was expressing myself as or not expressing myself as a good daughter or a good sister or a good wife, so long as I felt I was expressing myself and giving the individual note to my life as a woman."

There is a great deal of this kind of talk being heard today in America and in England, as well. The woman who made the address is said to be an excellent wife and mother, but it is doubtful if her words would prove anything of an incentive for other women to excel in those fields.

The speaker and others like her do not seem to realize that it is impossible to develop a worth while individual character which counts in the scheme of creation, unless one begins by performing every duty and every obligation to the very highest of one's ability from hour to hour, from day to day and from year to year. A score of years ago one of the "advanced thinkers" along this modern line of development expressed herself, both in speech and in conduct, to the same end. She declared it to be her God given right to live her own life as she felt called to live it, irrespective of the customs, traditions and ideals of other people.

As a consequence this woman, who possessed physical charms and a bright sparkling mind, married several men, allowed them to divorce her when she wearied of them, and left various children in various orphan asylums to be cared for during her periods of roaming about the earth, searching for new sources of "development." She wrote and delivered addresses when she was not marrying or unmarrying herself. Just what she has achieved in the way of development of her character or for the advancement of the race in general is difficult to state.

Theories such as she held many women hold today, though they may not so fully illustrate them. But they are mistaken theories, theories which mean degeneration instead of development and misfortune instead of benefit.

The young women engaged in any business which brings them a livelihood and who take no interest in the affairs of their employers are all tinctured to some extent with these ideas of "developing" along the lines of least resistance. They are pursuing their vocations only to pass the time until some larger opportunity presents itself.

It never occurs to them that the larger opportunity will call for larger capabilities on their part. They have no respect for or belief in the old ideas of patient industry and slow development, but those ideas are the right and the true ones. Character development is like the development of bulbs in the soil. There may be a forcing process used which will hurry the flowering season to some extent, but only to some extent, and even though this hurrying process may bring the flowering season sooner the flowers prove ephemeral unless the bulbs have rooted firmly in the soil.

Let this be your resolve: To do with all your might each small duty given you to do, and thus fit yourself for larger duties and positions, which will come if you are ready for them.

Give the Country a Merchant Marine Immediately

can conduct its commerce better than private interests can conduct it it should surrender the business to private interests.

All efforts of private concerns to establish the flag on the seas have failed. The Government can do this. Private interests plainly cannot.

A merchant marine is necessary. There is one way to provide it, and that way is through Government ownership.

Let the bill pass, therefore, and let the Government do for the commerce of the nation what private interests have failed to do.

Because of the war, products of every kind have been stored in warehouses. Many factories have been compelled to shut down. Hundreds and thousands of men have been forced into idleness, and all because there are not ships to take American goods to countries that are clamoring for them—ships flying the American flag and immune to interference by the navies of the nations engaged in the war.

The quickest way, the best way, almost the only way to bring prosperity to this country is to put ships on the seas under American registry and with the American flag as a guarantee of secure passage across the oceans.

In spite of its defects, the shipping bill will do this. Once the ships have been provided for, whatever improvements the bill requires can be made.

The foundation can be laid for a permanent merchant marine—one which shall outlast the war, and give to the United States the commercial supremacy to which it is entitled.

There is no danger that our commerce will be interfered with if it is carried in our own ships. Even Great Britain will not care to try that experiment.

Never has there been a time when ships were in such great demand—never has such an opportunity come to the United States.

It is the duty of Congress to seize it—to bring relief to American commerce, to rebuild a great industry that will itself rebuild many other great industries, and permanently to establish our flag on the seas.

'FITZ' KISSED MISS RYAN, WITNESS SAYS

Former Mayor Fitzgerald when told that one of the witnesses at the Ryan trial had testified today under oath that he had seen Mr. Fitzgerald kiss Miss Ryan one night at Ferncroft, said:

"It's a lie, pure and simple."

The name of former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald was brought into the testimony today at the trial of the $50,000 breach of promise suit brought by Elizabeth M. Ryan against Harry Mansfield, proprietor of the Ferncroft Inn.

The name of the former Mayor was brought out in the cross-examination of James F. Mullen, seventy-one years old, of No. 72 St. Stephen street, a retired wine merchant. He testified he had spent a week at Ferncroft in September, 1912.

Mullen said he and three other persons kissed Miss Ryan one night at the inn.

Attorney Coakley on cross-examination said:

"I want their names."

Attorney Sullivan: "An agreement has been entered into between Mr. Coakley and myself not to give names."

Coakley: "I insist the names be

R. C. DIXEY, RICH CLUBMAN, ENDS LIFE IN PLUNGE

Richard C. Dixey, head of one of Boston's oldest families, clubman and prominent in Back Bay life, committed suicide early today by leaping from a third-story rear window of his home, No. 44 Beacon street.

He died before a physician arrived, Medical Examiner Magrath pronounced the death a suicide.

Mr. Dixey was the father of Mrs. Gorham Brooks, wife of the deputy treasurer of Harvard College. She was formerly Miss Rosamond S. Dixey, who was one of the leading members of the Vincent Club and other organizations of the younger set.

Mr. Dixey's act was the result of acute nervous depression, which had caused him to be carefully watched.

He was in the personal care of William Mackey, his chauffeur and bodily attendant.

PLUNGED TO DEATH.

While Mackey was out of Mr. Dixey's chamber for a moment at 3:30 in the morning Mr. Dixey seized the opportunity to go to his death.

Mackey came back to an unoccupied room. His first anxious glance halted at the open window. Rushing to the window Mackey looked out and spied Mr. Dixey unconscious thirty feet below.

Mackey rushed downstairs and outdoors picked Mr. Dixey up, brought him in the house and notified the family.

Mr. Dixey is survived by his widow, who was Miss Ellen Norris Tappan, and by his daughter, Mrs. Brooks. He came of an old Marblehead family and had been living in the Back Bay for the past thirty-five years.

Mr. Dixey was a member of the Somerset and Tavern Clubs and had a large Summer estate at Lenox. The family has been prominent in social activities in the Berkshire season.

STATEMENT BY RELATIVE.

A relative of the Dixey family, gave out a statement, emphasizing that Mr Dixey's self-destruction was due to melancholia caused by illness and that his financial affairs are all right. This relative said:

"Mr. Dixey has been in ill health for several months. For the last two weeks he had been in a serious state of melancholia. The family chauffeur, William Mackey, had been a sort of attendant to him, watching his every movement and attending to all his wants.

"In some unknown manner Mr. Dixey escaped the attention of Mackey this morning, about 3:30 o'clock, went to the window, which was open, and, in one these fits of melancholia, did this act.

PLEAD AT STATE HOUSE FOR THE UNEMPLOYED

Governor Walsh's inaugural recommendation of immediate relief for the unemployed was unanimously indorsed at a remarkable meeting at the State House today of organized labor, settlement and social workers, organized charitable associations and public-spirited citizens.

So large was the crowd that assembled before the committee on taxation to urge the need for immediate relief that the meeting was transferred to one of the largest committee rooms in the State House.

Governor Walsh has struck the keynote of the very desperate situation that exists in Massachusetts," said Henry Sterling, legislative agent for the Massachusetts branch of the American Federation of Labor. "In Massachusetts today there are 150,000 workmen actually out of employment and 500,000 people who are directly affected by this unemployment. Organized labor waits for the decision of this committee."

J. H. B. Jennings, representing the Boston Central Labor Union and its 60,000 members, said: "Organized labor desires immediate relief."

"Never in our thirty-two years of existence have we suffered so acutely," said James A. Howland, representing the Carpenters' Unions. "Of our 7,500 members in Boston, 2,000 are out of employment."

Referring to the thousands of women out of employment, Miss Mabel Gillespie of the Women's Trade Union League said:

"We know you can't find work for them; our only hope is that you give work to the men. Woman's work depends entirely upon the money expended by men and their families, and very often the woman is the sole support of a family.

"We have found a girl working for $5 a week to support a family of five and she is working only half-time. Her father, an industrious, sober and able man, is walking the streets from early morning to late night in search of employment."

Meyer Bloomfield, representing twenty-four settlement houses in Boston, said to the committee:

"The time has come for your to cut red tape and give the men employment at once."

E. C. Amy of the Hale House, South End, said that the 25,000 people he comes into contact with through that house were suffering more than at any time in at least twenty-five years.

Indorsement of Governor Walsh's plan was pronounced by Edmund J. Murphy for the South End Board of Trade.

Miss Helena Dudley of the Denison House, Miss Adaline Moffit of the Neighborhood Houses, R. Preston Clark of the Dennison House and John D. Adams of the Denison House were among the other speakers. Former Representative John G. Sallonstall told of the favor with which the plan is viewed by the organized charities of Boston.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 19.—The British government today notified the State Department that it would not waive the right of seizure in the case of the former Hamburg-American steamer Dacia.

Great Britain also refused this government's request that the vessel be permitted to make one voyage with cotton from the United States to Germany without the voyage being considered a precedent establishing the right of German ships to be transferred to the American flag.

Ambassador Page, at London, stated that the British Foreign Office refused to make an exception in the Dacia case on the broad ground that it would be setting a dangerous precedent, despite the suggestion of this government that the Dacia would discharge her cargo at Rotterdam, Holland, instead of Bremen as was originally planned.

VIOLENT NEW EARTHQUAKE DAMAGES CALABRIA TOWNS; INHABITANTS FLEE IN TERROR

ROME, Jan. 19.—A violent earthquake shock occurred early today at Cosenza, a city of more than 20,000 inhabitants in Calabria, only twelve miles east of the Mediterranean.

The shock was also perceptible at Spezzano, Castiglione and Apricastro, according to a dispatch from Basignano.

Heavy damage is reported to have been caused in the entire province of Cosenza, but reports received here up to noon gave no definite details as to loss of life, though the dispatches carried rumors that a number of persons had perished.

Today's earthquake shock was practically a repetition of that disastrous earthquake of Lunar, eleven miles east of Cosenza. Many houses were levelled there and a number of the inhabitants buried in the ruins. Lunar is a town of 3,000 inhabitants, and the people were terrified by the shock.

They fled in panic to the open fields at the first warning. It is believed the loss of life would have been heavy there if it had not been for the recent disaster, remembering which the residents quickly left the town.

Several of the public buildings of Lunar were badly damaged, and there was also damage at Paola, Castrovillari, Rossano and Amantea, but preliminary reports received here said that there had been no loss of life at these towns.

As news of the earthquake was circulated in Calabria, which has been the scene of many earthquakes, practically all the people of that southern region were panicked for fear a disaster would occur in their own habitations. This alone, they say, caused the death of many of the inhabitants, who were trampled to death in the rush from their homes.

FEAR ZEPPELIN RAID ON PARIS

COPENHAGEN, Jan. 19.—A private dispatch from Berlin today reports that a Zeppelin airship sailed over Paris yesterday and that an aerial bombardment of the French capital is soon to begin. The new German drive at Soissons—which is the nearest point to the German line to Paris—is still raging. The present French capital is reported to be a part of this plan, it being the report-ed intention of the Germans to acquire a base for the airship raid as near as possible to Paris, because of the limitations of the Zeppelins in point of distance. Night aerial attacks have been active, hitherto only daylight raids have appeared on the fighting.
